Anorexie mentale, boulimie, dépression et impulsivité à l'adolescence Karine Lestideau, 2001

Les troubles du comportement alimentaire à l'adolescence restent une pathologie complexe suscitant encore des débats controversés L'objectif de ce travail était de trouver des indices cliniques prédictifs de l'évolution de l'anorexie mentale restrictive vers la boulimie Il a été réalisé dans une optique clinique essentiellement dimensionnelle L'hypothèse avancée était dans l'étude ponctuelle d'une part qu'il est possible de discriminer deux groupes de patients anorexiques restrictifs ou boulimiques en fonction des dimensions impulsivité et dépression D'autre part dans une deuxième étude prospective cette hypothèse était que ces mêmes dimensions peuvent avoir une valeur prédictive de l'évolution de l'anorexie restrictive vers des conduites boulimiques Deux groupes de patients ont fait l'objet de ce travail d'une part dans une étude ponctuelle n=31 et d'autre part dans une étude prospective sur 12 mois n=13 Nous avons utilisé plusieurs échelles d'évaluation psychométriques distinctes ayant déjà montré leur sensibilité et leur validité en clinique adolescente L'impulsivité et la dépression apparaissent comme deux dimensions cliniques pouvant prédire une évolution de l'anorexie restrictive à l'adolescence en direction de prise en charge vers une forme boulimique Nos résultats concordent avec notre hypothèse de départ Il est nécessaire de les confirmer sur une population d'étude plus importante Il pourra y avoir des implications thérapeutiques notamment sur l'indication de psychotropes dans l'anorexie mentale
