Transmethyations and the Central Nervous System

V. M. Andreoli, A. Agnoli, C. Fazio, 2013-12-11 V M ANDREOLI A AGNOLI and C FAZIO The transfer of a methyl group from a donor to an acceptor compound is a fundamental biochemical process long since known to biologists the process is involved for instance in the metabolism of porphyrins nucleic acids and fatty acids Only recently however did transmethylation processes reveal their decisive role in CNS biochemistry namely with the discovery that such processes are linked with the biogenic amines that have been conclusively identified as the chemical mediators of neuronal transmission and more broadly of behavior The first suggestion that transmethylation processes might be involved in the origination of certain mental diseases came from Harley Mason 1952 who noticed that many of the hallucinogenic substances known at that time contained methyl radicals and particularly that mescaline represented the product of O methylation of dopamine in positions 3 4 and 5 This hypothesis was put forward when the O methylation of catechol amines by catechol O methyltransferases had not yet been described Harley Mason further proposed that in the living organism the process of O methylation might follow a deviant metabolic pathway and that the accumulation of abnormal methylated metabolites endowed with hallucinogenic properties might be responsible for the implementation of some mental diseases notably schizophrenia He also called attention to a substance 3 4 dimethoxyphenylethylamine 3 4 DMPEA as a possible psychogenic molecule on the strength of its capacity for producing catatonia in experimental animals
