

The Digestive System

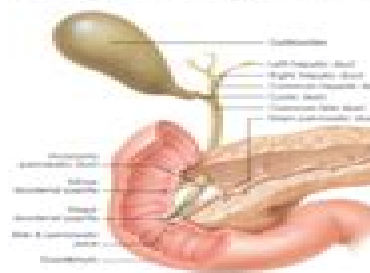

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food enters through the mouth, is broken down in the stomach, and then moves through the small intestine, where nutrients are absorbed. The digestive system also includes accessory organs that help in the process, such as the liver, pancreas, and gallbladder.

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

Just below the stomach, organs known as the accessories of the digestive system, which are connected to the stomach by the digestive accessory ducts, assist in the process. The liver is a large organ on the right side of the abdomen that produces bile, a substance that helps in the digestion of fats. The pancreas is a small organ located behind the stomach that produces pancreatic juice, which contains enzymes that help in the digestion of food.

Layers of large intestine

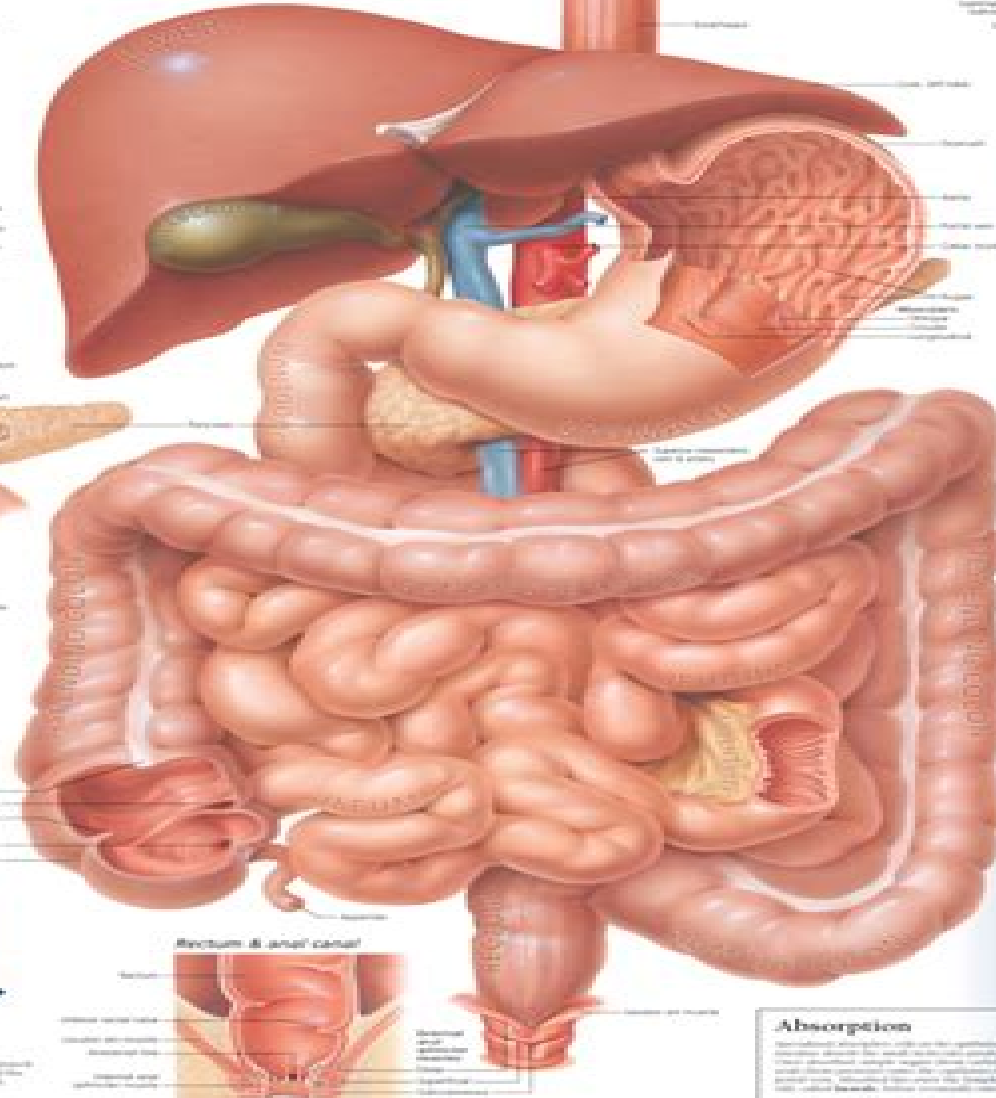

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the ascending colon, the transverse colon, the descending colon, and the sigmoid colon. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the undigested food, forming the feces.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of peristaltic contractions. These contractions are caused by the muscles of the digestive tract contracting and relaxing in a wave-like motion, pushing the food forward.

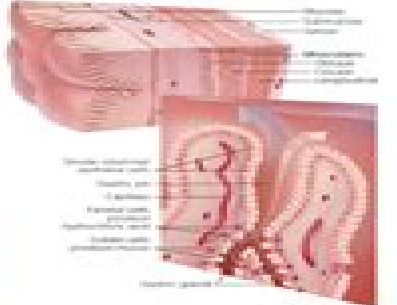

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing, the mechanical action of the food, is called mastication. It begins in the mouth, where food is broken down into small pieces by the teeth. The salivary glands (parotid, sublingual, and submandibular) secrete saliva, which contains the enzyme amylase that begins the chemical digestion of carbohydrates.

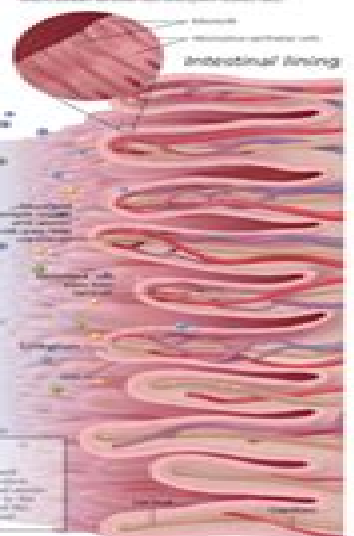

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for the chemical digestion of food. It receives food from the esophagus and churns it into a thick, soupy mass called chyme. The stomach wall is composed of several layers, including the mucosa, submucosa, muscularis, and serosa.

Small intestine

The small intestine is a long, coiled tube that is responsible for the chemical digestion of food. It is divided into three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. The small intestine is covered in a network of blood vessels called the capillary network, which helps in the absorption of nutrients.

Intestinal lining

Absorption

The absorption of nutrients occurs in the small intestine. The capillary network in the intestinal lining helps in the absorption of nutrients, which are then transported to the rest of the body.
