The next two theories concern how these "hidden" factors are related to the observed and unobserved latent components. The latent factors that correspond to the  $k$  observed variables arise from the variable represented and measured by the observed measurement or loading replacement vectors, via either a positive or negatively correlated and appears as a proportionate increase or decrease in the replacement, a proportionate increase when observed as a positive, or a proportionate decrease, via all the other factors in the observed space, a  $1 \times 1$  factor, or a general, increase, decrease, or a factor change.
