

AMA Diagnostic Manual Two

I entered the clinical field of psychology in 1969. Five decades later, I remain fascinated by human development and the impact of our experiences. This manual is published in 1968 by the American Psychiatric Association. APA is founded in 1844. We have learned a significant amount about clinical syndromes using a biopsychosocial (cultural) paradigm. Here, I offer my clinical observations.

These manuals are updated about every 10 years or so. They outline syndromes and relevant symptom clusters specific to each disorder. These manuals are meant to be used around the world. Newer versions are much more culturally competent than this one. It takes into account co-morbidity which to this day is a very common clinical presentation.

Mental Retardation

Degrees of MR include: borderline, mild, moderate, severe and profound. It offers possible etiology at each level. The last two levels are thought to be genetic; while the previous ones are more likely due to psychosocial deprivation.

Organic Brain Syndrome

The rationale in this category rests in "brain tissue" pathology. This includes forms of dementia, alcohol psychosis, intracranial infections, brain trauma, and the like.

Non-Psychotic OBS

These are quite similar to the above, and also rooted in underlying medical etiologies.

Schizophrenia

Subtypes include: simple, hebephrenic, catatonic (excited), catatonia (withdrawn), paranoid, latent and residual, excited and depressed. They also include childhood onset.

Major Affective Disorders

Manic depressive, manic subtype, MDI depressive, MDI circular are the major syndromes indicated.

Neuroses

Anxiety, hysterical, phobic, depressive, depersonalization, and hypochondrical
