

Methadone for pain in palliative care

Results from a survey of more than 800 BC family physicians indicate that most physicians already authorized to prescribe methadone for analgesic purposes support the requirement for authorization and believe the authorizing process is not burdensome.

ABSTRACT: Methadone is primarily a mu opioid receptor agonist with additional unique properties that make it a potent analgesic. Over the last 10 years this synthetic opioid has become one of the most important agents for treating opioid-nonresponsive pain in palliative care. Despite this, fewer than 1 in 10 medical practitioners in BC are authorized to prescribe methadone for analgesia. A survey conducted as a palliative care residency project (report in press, Pain Research and Management) found most physicians who are already authorized to prescribe methadone report experiencing little difficulty obtaining authorization through the College of Physicians and Surgeons of BC. In general these prescribers also support the requirement for authorization because of the need to avoid potentially serious drug interactions and overdoses. As well, survey results indicated that many physicians not authorized to prescribe methadone would be willing to apply for authorization in order to continue methadone prescriptions for a patient treated initially by a palliative care physician or pain specialist.

This article has been peer reviewed.

Methadone is a synthetic opioid used for managing opioid dependence and as a second-line opioid analgesic. A dramatic increase in methadone use for pain has occurred over the last 10 years, with shared worldwide experience indicating that methadone has become one of the most important agents for treating opioid-nonresponsive pain in palliative care. Despite this, at the time of writing there were only 685 medical practitioners in BC authorized to prescribe methadone for analgesia (6.4% of registered physicians), with a significant proportion of these being pain or palliative care specialists. The paucity of family doctors able to take over care of methadone prescribing for stable patients is a barrier to methadone's use by palliative care and pain and symptom management teams, and limits our ability to allow anticipated natural deaths to occur at home, in hospice, and in residential care under the care of family physicians, rather than in acute care hospitals.

A recent survey of more than 800 BC family physicians explored the barriers to physicians obtaining the authorization to prescribe methadone for pain, with the goal of educating physicians through various initiatives, including articles such as this one. The survey, conducted by Dr Ryan Liebscher (resident in the Year of Added Competency in Palliative Care July 2009–June 2010, Division of Palliative Care, Department of Family Practice, Faculty of Medicine, UBC), was collected in summer and fall 2010 and analyzed in spring 2011. (Note that this article specifically addresses the use of methadone in palliative care and not the use of methadone in chronic noncancer pain. Physicians wishing to prescribe methadone for this purpose are advised to become familiar with the Canadian guideline for safe and effective use of opioids for non-cancer pain.)

Role of methadone in palliative care

Though there are no large randomized controlled trials showing that methadone is superior to morphine or other opioids, small trials and studies using other methodologies have clearly shown that a switch to methadone

Dr Hawley is a general internal medicine and palliative medicine specialist, and is medical leader of the Pain and Symptom Management/Palliative Care Team at the Vancouver Centre of the BC Cancer Agency.
