

The Great Gatsby Critical Essay - English AT3 2022

"The Great Gatsby speaks to the heart of the modern condition; its conclusions are not all favourable."
To what extent is this true of your personal interpretation of the text?

F. Scott Fitzgerald's The Great Gatsby concludes that the heart of the modern condition lies where idealism has begun to fail and nothing functions as it should. The novella significantly correlates to my personal reading as it entirely speaks as a pessimistic critique of the modern condition. Written during the early 20th century, Fitzgerald critiques the failure of social systems and reflects on how the social hierarchy prevents individuals from striving to transcend their given social class. Moreover, Fitzgerald constructs his modern tragedy to critique the immorality of the moneyed elite, displaying them as morally depraved, careless individuals who disregard society's needs in favour of their wealth and prestige. Finally, he laments how hedonistic and hopeful individuals seem to lack the realisation of the fundamentally broken American Dream.

The Great Gatsby speaks to the heart of the malfunctioning social system. Modern America suffers a severe lack of social mobility because of the economic boom of the 1920s, which distinctly separated the rich and the poor. Gatsby spent his whole life attempting to climb the malfunctioning social ladder yet he can't seem to replicate the same sophistication, delicacy, and judgement as the de facto aristocracy. The reader is made aware of this through the juxtaposition between Gatsby and Tom's mansions. Fitzgerald uses an extended metaphor and personification of Gatsby's 40 acres of lawn and garden: "The lawn started at the beach and ran toward the front door ...., jumping over sun-dials and brick walls...., finally when it reached the house". Gatsby's home is used as a symbol of status, it is seen as a garish display of wealth which is counter to the dignity and elegance of old money. So the house becomes incoherent much like Gatsby. In contrast to Gatsby's mansion, the Buchanans' residence is in perfect balance with nature; the lawn and the house are an ideal fit. Again, Fitzgerald uses a metaphor to illustrate how individuals fail when attempting to climb the malfunctioning social ladder, "So we beat on, boats against the current, borne back ceaselessly into the past". Fitzgerald's choice of a melancholy tone emphasises that the past cannot be repeated. The adverb "ceaselessly" and the phrase "borne back against" demonstrate an everlasting, fruitless fight. As this is the final line of the novella, it is an indication that efforts to obtain wealth, pleasure and happiness have not achieved anything conclusive or satisfying. Thus...

The Great Gatsby critiques how hedonistic and hopeful individuals seem to lack the realisation of the corrupt American Dream. Fitzgerald uses the American Dream as a recurring motif that drives Gatsby's ambition on a journey towards acquiring wealth. Gatsby's capacity for hope is evident when he states "my life, old sport, my life.... my life has got to be like this it's got to keep going up". The repetition conveys Gatsby's desperate desire to continue acquiring more and more throughout life. This suggests to the reader that he'll never be satisfied, he aims beyond reach and intends to keep climbing the social ladder—even if it's unattainable. The American Dream is fundamentally broken, however Gatsby still holds onto hope, as Fitzgerald demonstrates through the recurring symbol of the green light, "He stretched out his arms toward the dark water.... Involuntarily I glanced seaward – and distinguished nothing except a single green light". It embodies everything which irritates and tempts Gatsby, including Daisy and his physical and emotional separation, the barrier between the old and the new money, Gatsby's ambitions and plans for the future, and the appeal of that other green substance he desires, wealth. Yet, when it starts to vanish he is still eagerly seeking something just beyond reach. Consequentially....
