

The human skeleton is composed of 206 bones, which are divided into the axial skeleton (skull and spine) and the appendicular skeleton (arms and legs). The bones are made of a hard, mineralized tissue called bone, which is constantly being renewed and repaired. The process of bone formation is called ossification, and it occurs in the bone marrow. The bones are connected by joints, which allow for movement. The skeleton provides support, protection, and a framework for the muscles and organs.

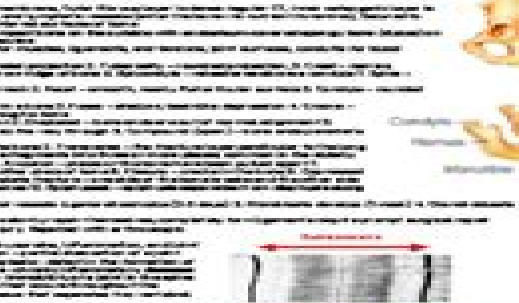

The human arm and hand bones are part of the appendicular skeleton. The humerus is the upper arm bone, the radius and ulna are the forearm bones, and the carpals, metacarpals, and phalanges are the bones of the hand and fingers. These bones are connected by joints, allowing for a wide range of motion.

The human leg and foot bones are part of the appendicular skeleton. The femur is the thigh bone, the tibia and fibula are the lower leg bones, and the tarsals, metatarsals, and phalanges are the bones of the foot and toes. These bones are connected by joints, allowing for movement and support.

The structure of a long bone is designed for strength and flexibility. The shaft (diaphysis) is the long, central part of the bone, and the ends (epiphyses) are the rounded, expanded parts. The medullary cavity is the hollow space inside the shaft, and the periosteum is the outer layer of the bone. The bone is made of a hard, mineralized tissue called bone, which is constantly being renewed and repaired.

The human muscular system is composed of skeletal muscles, which are attached to bones and contract to produce movement. The muscles are made of a soft, fibrous tissue called muscle, which is constantly being renewed and repaired. The process of muscle contraction is called the sliding filament theory, and it involves the interaction of actin and myosin filaments.

The structure of a muscle fiber is designed for contraction. The sarcomere is the basic unit of muscle contraction, and it is made of actin and myosin filaments. The myofibril is a long, cylindrical structure made of repeating sarcomeres. The muscle fiber is surrounded by a membrane called the sarcolemma, and it contains a network of blood vessels called the capillary network.
