

The Digestive System

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food is broken down mechanically in the mouth or physically through a series of chemical reactions and enzymatic secretions, allowing nutrients to be absorbed. The digestive system also removes indigestible components that must be excreted as the waste of the gastrointestinal tract.

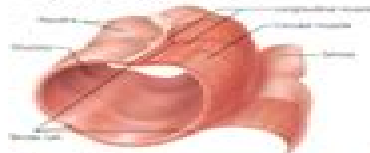

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, digested material enters the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, which is connected to the pancreas by the duodenal papilla. The pancreas secretes pancreatic juice, which is then secreted into the duodenum. The pancreas also secretes hormones, such as insulin, which regulate blood sugar levels.

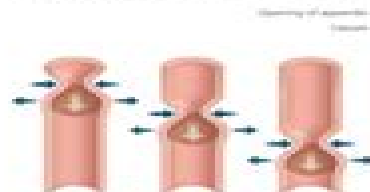

Layers of large intestine

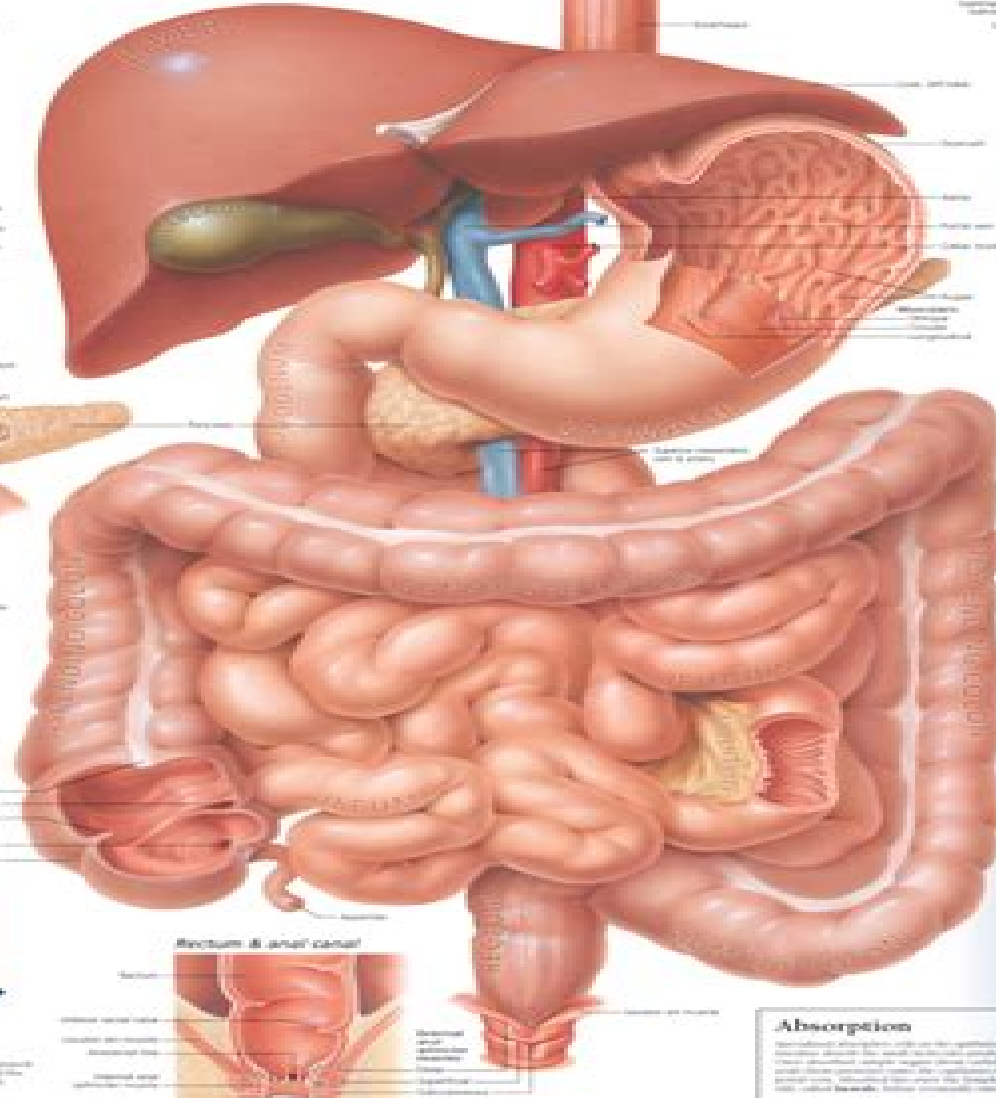

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the ascending colon, the transverse colon, the descending colon, the sigmoid colon, and the rectum. The large intestine is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the undigested food, forming the feces.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful muscular contractions called peristalsis. These contractions move the material forward and the food is then, after the digestion is complete.

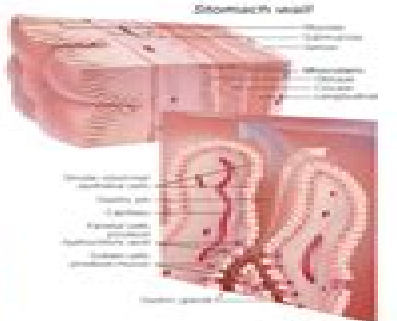

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing the food breaks it into smaller pieces, making it easier to swallow. Saliva, secreted by the salivary glands, moistens the food and helps in the digestion of carbohydrates. Saliva also contains the enzyme amylase, which begins the digestion of starches in the mouth.

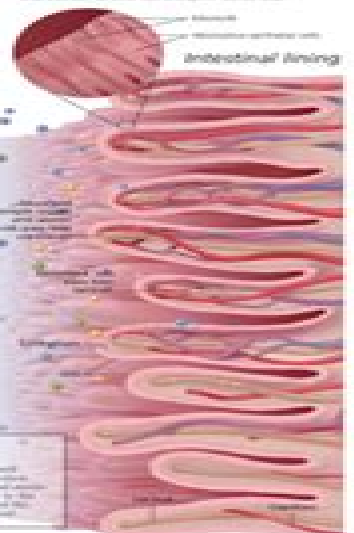

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for storing and mixing food with gastric juices. The stomach is divided into two main parts: the cardia, which is the entrance to the stomach, and the pylorus, which is the exit. The stomach wall is composed of several layers, including the mucosa, submucosa, muscularis, and serosa.

Small intestine

The small intestine is a long, coiled tube that is responsible for the majority of the digestion and absorption of nutrients. It is divided into three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. The small intestine is characterized by its highly folded internal surface, which increases the area available for absorption.

Absorption

The process of absorption involves the transport of the nutrients and water from the small intestine into the bloodstream. This process occurs in the villi, which are small, finger-like projections that line the small intestine. The villi are covered with a thin layer of cells called the intestinal epithelium, which allows for the exchange of nutrients and water between the small intestine and the bloodstream.
