6. A business should be clear why it is considering selling on the internet – to open up the business to a much bigger market and increase sales? – should this happen, has it got the productive capacity and the financial resources to expand?

Factors to consider might include:

- Review the logistics of selling online – can you deliver the product easily and cost-effectively to customers?
- A website needs to be designed – need to employ a specialist designer to produce a functional website?
- Determine how the business will market products – decide how to create a large amount of traffic on website.
- Need to review costs (extra costs) associated with online selling, e.g. cost of designing, maintaining, hosting website – marketing expenses, payment processing costs.
- Need to do a cost/benefit exercise – is profitability maintained or enhanced or depressed?
- Continue with traditional selling to spread the risk?
- How well will the internet serve your business needs?
- How well will your particular business model fit into the way the World Wide Web works? (context to be referenced).

ALB. The context in this question is 'electronic goods manufacturer'.

(Evaluative discussion of main factors that could be considered (in context). [17–20]

Analysis of main factors to consider (in context). [13–16]

Good understanding of main factors to consider. [11–12]

Some understanding of main factors to consider. [5–10]

Very limited understanding of factors affecting selling on internet. [1–4]

7. (a) The inherent strengths of family owned businesses – businesses where the voting majority is in the hands of the controlling family – are many for example:

- family dedicated to business – work hard to build and grow the company and re-invest profits and
- there is pride and focus in reputation and quality of product and maintain good relations with external stakeholders.

But, the weaknesses often outweigh the strengths, weaknesses such as:

- complexity of different roles played by family members and governance problems – different motives and strategies from different family members
- too much informality, not enough clear business practices and procedures – with growth may come significant conflict
- neglect of strategic management, succession planning, lack of external management expertise
- plus, family owned businesses may have poor cost control, poor cash flow, poor management
- means that the majority of family owned businesses are not sustainable
- discipline difficulties i.e. reluctance to discipline or sack family members
- family arguments might be brought into the work situation.
