

The Digestive System

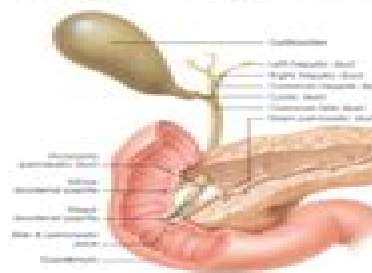

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food enters through the mouth, is broken down in the stomach, and then moves through the small intestine, where nutrients are absorbed. The digestive system also includes accessory organs that help in the process, such as the liver, pancreas, and gallbladder.

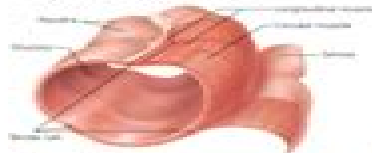

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

Just below the stomach, organs known as the accessories of the digestive system, which are connected to the stomach by the digestive accessory ducts, assist in the process. The liver is a large organ on the right side of the abdomen that produces bile, a substance that helps in the digestion of fats. The pancreas is a small organ located behind the stomach that produces pancreatic juice, which contains enzymes that help in the digestion of carbohydrates, proteins, and fats.

Layers of large intestine

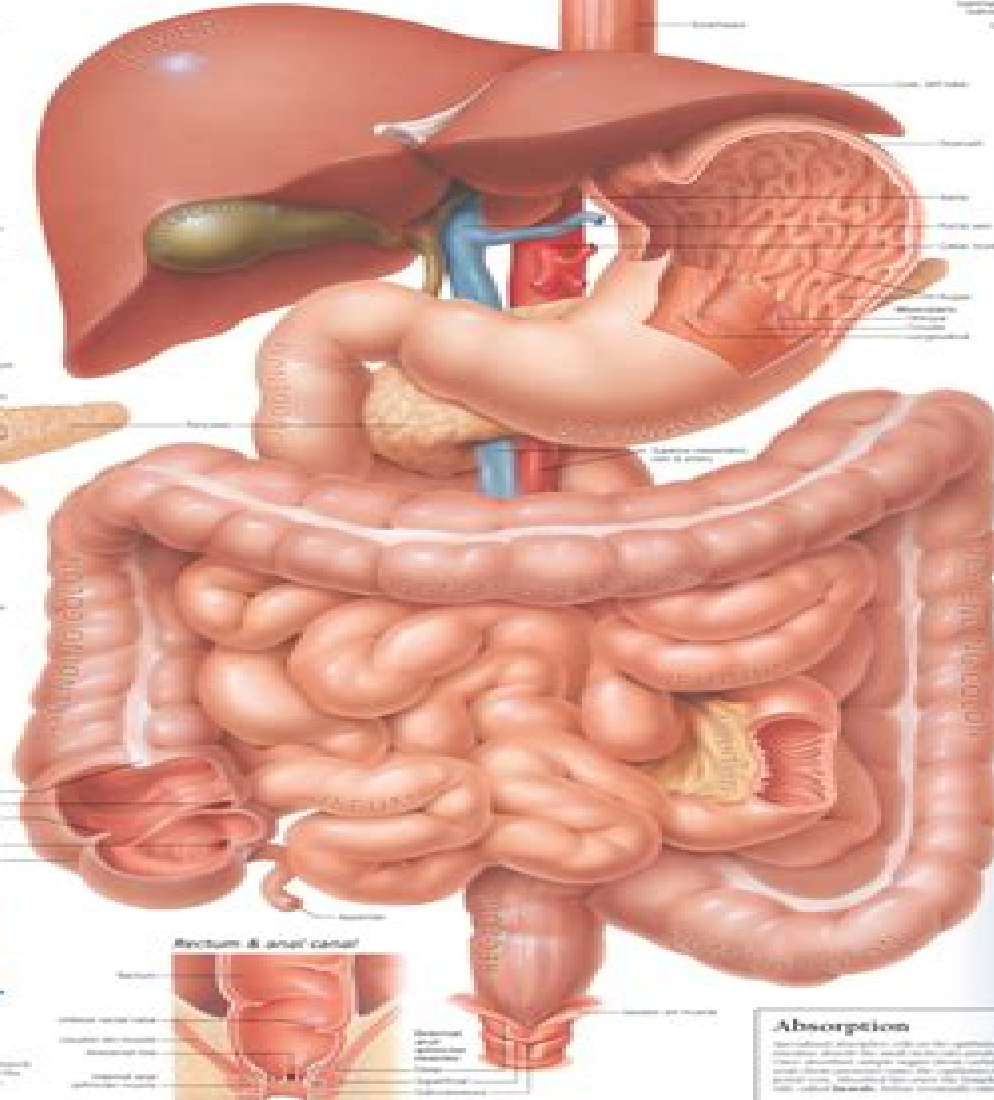

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the ascending colon, the transverse colon, the descending colon, and the sigmoid colon. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the remaining indigestible food matter, thereby forming feces.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of peristaltic contractions. These contractions are initiated by the peristaltic reflex, which is a reflex action that causes the smooth muscles of the digestive tract to contract and move food forward.

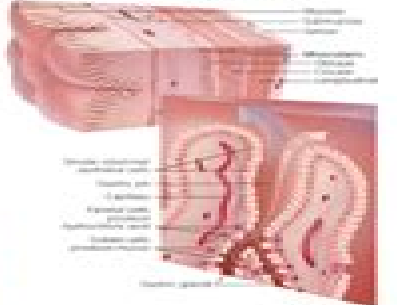

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing, the mechanical action of the food, is called mastication. It begins in the mouth, where food is broken down into small pieces by the teeth. The salivary glands, which are located in the mouth, produce saliva, a fluid that helps in the digestion of food. The salivary glands are composed of the parotid gland, the submandibular gland, and the sublingual gland.

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for the digestion of food. It is located in the upper left part of the abdomen. The stomach has a thick, muscular wall that contracts and relaxes to move food through it. The stomach is divided into two main parts: the cardiac region and the pyloric region.

Small intestine

The small intestine is a long, coiled organ that is responsible for the digestion of food. It is located in the central part of the abdomen. The small intestine is divided into three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. The duodenum is the first part of the small intestine, where it receives food from the stomach. The jejunum is the middle part of the small intestine, where most of the digestion and absorption of nutrients occurs. The ileum is the last part of the small intestine, where the remaining nutrients are absorbed.

Absorption

The process of absorption is the process by which nutrients are taken up by the cells of the digestive tract. It occurs in the small intestine, where the nutrients are broken down into small molecules that can be absorbed. The absorption of nutrients is a complex process that involves the transport of nutrients across the intestinal wall and into the bloodstream.
