What are you confused with the article's conclusion about depressive patients' improved coping under antidepressant treatment? Is the article's conclusion supported? A conclusion about clinical significance cannot be drawn. Effectiveness cannot be tested, and because there are just a few studies published, clearly more are underway, though it is likely.

What are the limitations? The authors' generalization applies to the antidepressant M-3000, which cannot be generalized to other antidepressants, which themselves have been shown to have a higher degree of efficacy. The overall benefit is probably even higher, but the authors' conclusion is based on a single study. The authors' and researchers' findings regarding the overall benefit of antidepressant therapy are based on the data used and on a single antidepressant. However, comparing antidepressant effectiveness between different groups after a single study is not possible.

1. Effects and outcomes based on a single study group?

2. The antidepressant treatment is higher than the other study groups, and the overall benefit is not.

3. The antidepressant treatment is a higher percentage of the antidepressant and the overall benefit is not.

4. The antidepressant treatment is higher than the other study groups, and the overall benefit is not.
