

12. Figure 12 shows a different, more complex case of the dynamics of the system when the conditions that give the curve and the equilibrium are under the complex surface.

Figure 11.20 is a photograph of a representative section of the dense, white, fibrous, waxy growth that sometimes fills the entire surface of the leaves. The growth is caused by the feeding of the female European spruce sawfly larvae. The feeding causes the leaves to become distorted, and the feeding damage appears as the branching, elongated lesions in Figure 11.20. In some cases, the growth is so dense that it completely covers the leaves.
