

The Stickleback Fish - A Story of Modern Evolution

Sticklebacks are a small fish commonly found in freshwater. To understand this species better, scientists compared different types of sticklebacks and discovered that sticklebacks have different numbers of bony armor plates. These plates are made of bone and are called osteocytes. They are found on the sides of the fish and are important for protection and movement.

Background

One of the most important and interesting things about sticklebacks is that they have different numbers of bony armor plates. This is because of a change in the number of genes that control the development of these plates.

1. There are two main types of sticklebacks. One type is called three-spined stickleback and the other is called five-spined stickleback. They are found in different parts of the world, including Europe, North America, and Asia.
2. Scientists have found that the number of bony armor plates is different between the two types. The three-spined stickleback has three bony armor plates, while the five-spined stickleback has five bony armor plates.
3. Scientists have also found that the number of bony armor plates is different between different populations of the same type of stickleback. This is because of a change in the number of genes that control the development of these plates.
4. Scientists have also found that the number of bony armor plates is different between different populations of the same type of stickleback. This is because of a change in the number of genes that control the development of these plates.
