Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 20) participated in a 12-week training program, while the control group (n = 20) remained sedentary. The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The sessions included aerobic exercise, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The primary outcome was the change in physical fitness, measured by the 6-minute walk test (6MWT) and the 4-minute step test (4MST). Secondary outcomes included changes in body composition, blood pressure, and health-related quality of life, measured by the SF-36 questionnaire. The results showed that the intervention group had significant improvements in 6MWT, 4MST, and body composition compared to the control group. There were no significant differences in blood pressure and health-related quality of life between the two groups. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve physical fitness and body composition in sedentary, middle-aged women.
