

Analysis of a Squirrel Gene Pool

Suppose that, after a natural disaster, a small population of 1000 squirrels were left isolated. Between 1970 and 1990, they produced at least another 100000 squirrels but at the end of the twentieth century, because the increasing of urban and natural habitats, this isolated population started being surrounded by other squirrel populations. In 2000, a geneticist started working in this population and he decided to analyze the genetic diversity of the population. He decided to analyze the frequency of alleles for a particular gene that codes for a protein that controls the color of the fur. This gene has two alleles: the dominant allele (A) codes for a brown fur and the recessive allele (a) codes for a white fur. The population was in Hardy-Weinberg equilibrium in 1970.

Suppose that the population was in Hardy-Weinberg equilibrium in 1970.
