SELECTIONS

Quick selection tool and Magic Wand

These tools are great for quick and rough selections. 90% of the time you can start making your selections with them and then refine them with other tools.

Both tools are making selections by neighboring colour information. The difference is that with the Magic Wand tool you need to click every time you would like to add to or subtract from your selection, while with the Quick selection tool you're able to drag around the part you would like to select and it expands the selection automatically as the way.

For refining my selections I like to use Quick Mask mode, where you can use your brush and paint with black and white to change your selection.

After the refinement of the edges I always save my selection as a layer mask with the layer itself or into an adjustment layer's mask.

Most selections can be made quickly and efficiently with this workflow so it's highly recommended to learn it and practice it.
