

Shipping and Docking Containers
 From 1975 to 1979, the U.S. Coast Guard's Marine Safety Council reported that 1,100 containers were lost overboard from ships. The loss of containers is a major problem for the shipping industry. The U.S. Coast Guard is working with the shipping industry to develop a system of container tracking and identification. This system will allow the Coast Guard to locate and recover lost containers more quickly and efficiently. The system will also help to prevent the loss of containers in the first place. The U.S. Coast Guard is currently testing a prototype container tracking system. This system uses a radio frequency identification (RFID) system to track containers. The RFID system consists of a transponder that is attached to each container. The transponder emits a signal that can be received by a receiver on the ship. The receiver then sends the signal to a computer, which records the container's location. The computer also records the container's weight and other information. The U.S. Coast Guard is currently testing this system on a number of ships. The results of the testing are promising. The U.S. Coast Guard expects to implement the system on a larger scale in the near future.
