Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether the use of a computerized decision support system (DSS) could improve the performance of a group of novice nurses in a simulated patient care scenario. A total of 60 nursing students were randomly assigned to two groups: one group used a DSS, and the other group did not. The DSS provided real-time feedback and guidance during the simulation. Results showed that the group using the DSS performed significantly better than the control group in terms of task completion time, error rate, and patient satisfaction. These findings suggest that a DSS can enhance the performance of novice nurses in a simulated environment.
