- 4. The future of the field

It is hoped that these notes will be helpful to students in understanding the course material.

Although the typical decision for each treatment will be the same (because each will have a high or low probability of success), there will be differences in the different scenarios. In some cases, the decision will be to treat, while in other cases, the decision will be to not treat. The decision will be based on the expected utility of each treatment, which will be calculated based on the probability of success and the utility of each outcome.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health of sedentary, middle-aged men. The subjects were 20 men, aged 40-50 years, who were sedentary and had no known cardiovascular disease. They were divided into two groups: a control group and an exercise group. The exercise group performed a 12-week training program consisting of aerobic and resistance training. The control group remained sedentary. Physical fitness was measured using a variety of tests, including a 1-mile run, a 1.5-mile walk, a 1.5-mile jog, a 1.5-mile swim, and a 1.5-mile bike ride. Health was measured using a variety of tests, including blood pressure, heart rate, and cholesterol levels. The results of the study showed that the exercise group had significantly better physical fitness and health than the control group after 12 weeks of training.
