Developing Evidence-Based, Food-Based Dietary Guidelines: Critical Contributions of Dairy

Scientific excellence
Industry applicability
Strategic networking
Global influence

The purpose of this factsheet is to provide context and rationale for addressing the evolving recommendations surrounding dairy in global Food-Based Dietary Guidelines (FBDG). It highlights the importance of including nutrient-dense foods, specifically dairy foods, in FBDGs based on credible scientific evidence.

Why are Food-Based Dietary Guidelines Necessary?

FBDGs are recommendations for healthy eating patterns and lifestyle choices created by governmental agencies and health authorities. These provide advice on the types and amounts of foods, food groups, and nutritionally adequate dietary patterns that promote health and prevent chronic diseases. In addition, FBDGs may also form the basis for a wide range of decisions made by policy makers, health professionals, and food manufacturers, among others. FBDGs should be based on robust scientific evidence and designed to be tailored to the specific nutritional and cultural needs, and the food choices and availability of a population. FBDGs typically encourage the consumption of a variety of nutrient-dense foods and limitation of foods and beverages that contain high amounts of nutrients connected with increased risk of non-communicable diseases (NCDs) (e.g., added sugars, saturated fat, sodium). FBDGs are powerful tools for promoting nutrition security, overall health, and well-being among populations. Thus, there is a need for concomitant education and communication tactics. Messaging within FBDGs plays an important role in both national and global health efforts. However, FBDGs are not standardized and vary considerably from country to country, and from food group to food group, with implications for dairy recommendations around the world (Comerford et al., 2021).

Recommendations for What FBDG's Should Address

1. Meet Nutrient Needs Across the Lifespan: provide high-quality protein, vitamins and minerals necessary for various bodily functions, such as growth and development, immune function, and metabolism.
2. Support Healthy Growth and Development: provide the nutrition needed for optimal cognitive development, strong bones, and lean muscle, as well as development and maintenance of good health across the lifespan.
3. Reduce Risk of diet-related Chronic Diseases: lower risk of cardiovascular disease, osteoporosis, type 2 diabetes, diet-related cancers, and excess body fat.
4. Address Nutrition Security: ensuring access to sufficient, safe, and nutritious food to maintain a healthy and active life.
5. Maintain a Healthy Weight: help support weight management and optimal body composition.
