Josie loved this time of year. She had left her house just as the Sun was waking up and peering over the horizon. She wanted to reach the top of Morrison Mount before any of the tourists. Not that she minded the tourists – they kept her coffee shop busy, after all – but because she loved the feelings of calm and solitude she got when she was alone on the summit.

Walking through the trees, she paused to admire the orange and brown hues of the leaves. Soon, they would descend gracefully to the ground and the trees would stand tall, proudly facing the battle that winter would bring. Not all would survive.

Leaving the cover of the woods, Josie began making her way up to the summit. The rocky path twisted and turned, hugging the hillside. She had walked this way countless times and was soon within touching distance of the top.

As she reached her destination, she was struck by how beautiful the landscape looked below. A thin mist covered the lake like a veil and toy cars busied themselves on the thin, ribbonlike roads.

After observing the scenery for a few more minutes, Josie reluctantly began her descent.

Which word in the second paragraph means colours?
