

The Issue

The Medicaid program is the largest single source of health care coverage in the United States, covering nearly half of all children, over 40% of births (including nearly 50% of births in rural communities), many low-income elderly and disabled individuals, and working adults in low-wage jobs that do not offer affordable coverage. Congress is currently considering policy options that could collectively reduce federal spending for the Medicaid program by trillions of dollars over the next 10 years. These options include proposals to directly reduce federal spending on the program and limit states' ability to generate funding for the state share of the costs.

AHA Take

Even a small portion of the proposed reductions could have wide-ranging negative consequences for the health and well-being of both Medicaid enrollees and the broader health care system. AHA urges Congress to reject reductions to the Medicaid program that would not only strip access to health care from some of the most vulnerable populations but also destabilize hospitals and health systems, leading to a loss of services that would impact patients and communities nationwide.

Why?

- Medicaid provides critical health coverage to a wide variety of people in every community across the nation. This coverage helps ensure patients can receive the medical services needed to live healthier and more productive lives.
- Medicaid covers over 40% of births in the U.S., including nearly 50% of births in rural communities.¹ It is also a vital source of prenatal and postpartum care for women across the country.
- State Medicaid programs pay hospitals less than the cost hospitals incur to provide care to Medicaid patients. In 2023, the difference between Medicaid payments and costs, known as "Medicaid shortfall," was $27.5 billion.²
- Medicaid is an important source of support for the health care system. The impact of cuts to Medicaid would not be limited to just Medicaid beneficiaries. It would stress the availability of health care services for everyone. Today, hospitals that serve disproportionately high rates of Medicaid and other public-payer patients routinely operate with negative margins and are often forced to terminate service lines or close entirely. Reductions in federal support for Medicaid would exacerbate these pressures, which could strip essential health care services for an entire community.
- Medicaid is one of the most cost-efficient forms of coverage. It has lower total and per capita costs than all other major health programs, including Medicare and private health insurance.
- Most of the spending on Medicaid is for disabled and elderly individuals. States could not absorb the magnitude of the proposed cuts by solely reducing enrollment or services for working-age adults — the disabled and elderly populations would also be negatively impacted.
