

Short Answer Questions

Question 1

Organizations pursuing change take the business environment into account as they seek to gain or enhance strategic business positions and to build strong and healthy and well-perpetuated operating units.

- a. It is correct organization as important environmental question is what the world, and not what they do. The business world is increasingly fragmented in technology, markets, and strategy, leading to increasing uncertainty and change. The "new world" is increasingly uncertain and complex.
- b. It is correct and well-perpetuated as a business structure. There are several reasons for this. First, the business world is increasingly fragmented in technology, markets, and strategy, leading to increasing uncertainty and change. The "new world" is increasingly uncertain and complex.
- c. The business organization is based on relationships with suppliers, customers, and other stakeholders. The world is increasingly uncertain and complex, and the business organization is a complex organization.
