Closing the Gap Karen Keaton Jackson, Sandra Vavra, 2007-09-01

Without contraries there is no progression William Blake This is a book about reality and hope Its chapters reframe the concept of gap acknowledging distances for example acknowledging old insights and theory while also honoring teacher discovery However it refuses to bow under the weight of these challenges Its contributors focus instead on how to overcome acknowledged inadequacies in learning how to teach writing as well as how to practice principled literacy instruction These contributors see gaps not as unbridgeable chasms but rather as opportunities to educate their students to use writing to understand the broader context of their education and pre service candidates to adapt curriculum creatively Contributors include new and seasoned secondary school teachers graduate students and university faculty who together remind us of old insights needing to be passed along Villanueva and show us new practices that challenge the conventions of the status quo and promote social justice To close the gaps in short they demonstrate how rhetoric and truth are intertwined In a time when too many children continue to be left behind this book should be required reading for all literacy teachers because it is in our continued willingness to learn from each other that hope resides the human mirror neuron system? Analia Arevalo,Juliana Baldo,Fernando González-Perilli, Agustin Ibanez,2016-03-09 In recent years work surrounding theories of embodiment and the role of the putative mirror neuron system MNS in humans has gained considerable attention If humans have developed a network of neurons that fire in response to other beings actions as has been shown in macaques this system could have vast implications for all kinds of cognitive processes unique to humans such as language learning empathy and communication in general The goal of tapping into and understanding such a system is a fascinating yet challenging one One form of embodiment embodied linguistics suggests that the way we process linguistic information is linked to our physical experience of the concept conveyed by each word. The interaction between these cognitive systems i.e. language and motor processing may occur thanks to the firing of neurons making up the MNS. The possible interdependence between different cognitive systems has implications for healthy as well as pathological profiles and in fact work in recent years has also explored the role of embodiment and or the MNS in clinical populations such as stroke, Parkinson's Disease, Alzheimer's Disease and Autism among others. Research on embodiment and or the MNS has been approached with a number of different methodologies but the results obtained with these different methodologies have not been entirely consistent, generating doubts regarding the theories. The question has been raised as to what this line of inquiry can gain from the types of evidence contributed by functional neuroimaging methods carried out with healthy volunteers versus behavioral or lesion/symptom mapping methods employed with neurologically compromised individuals. Of particular interest are the clinical applications of this line of research. If indeed a system exists which reflects a tight link between for example the human language and motor systems then the obvious challenge is to tap into this system to create useful therapies that can provide rehabilitation where damage has occurred. This Research Topic brought together work conducted with healthy and patient populations using several behavioral and imaging techniques as well as insightful commentaries and opinion pieces. We believe the combined work of the participating authors is an important contribution to this intriguing line of research and an excellent point of reference for future work.
