

The Digestive System

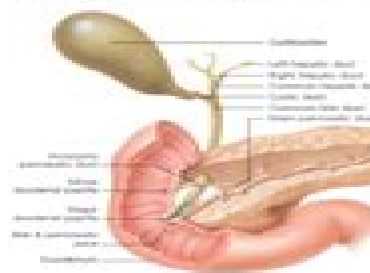

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food is broken down mechanically in the mouth or physically through a series of chemical reactions and enzymatic secretions, allowing nutrients to be absorbed. The digestive system also removes indigestible components that must be excreted as the waste of the gastrointestinal tract.

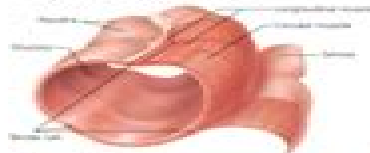

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, digested material enters the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, which is connected to the pancreas by the duodenal papilla. The pancreas, which is a small organ in the retroperitoneum, secretes pancreatic juice into the duodenum. The pancreas also secretes insulin and glucagon, hormones that regulate blood sugar levels.

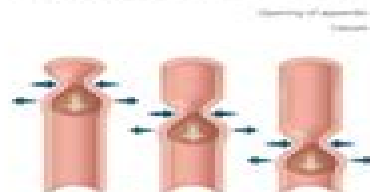

Layers of large intestine

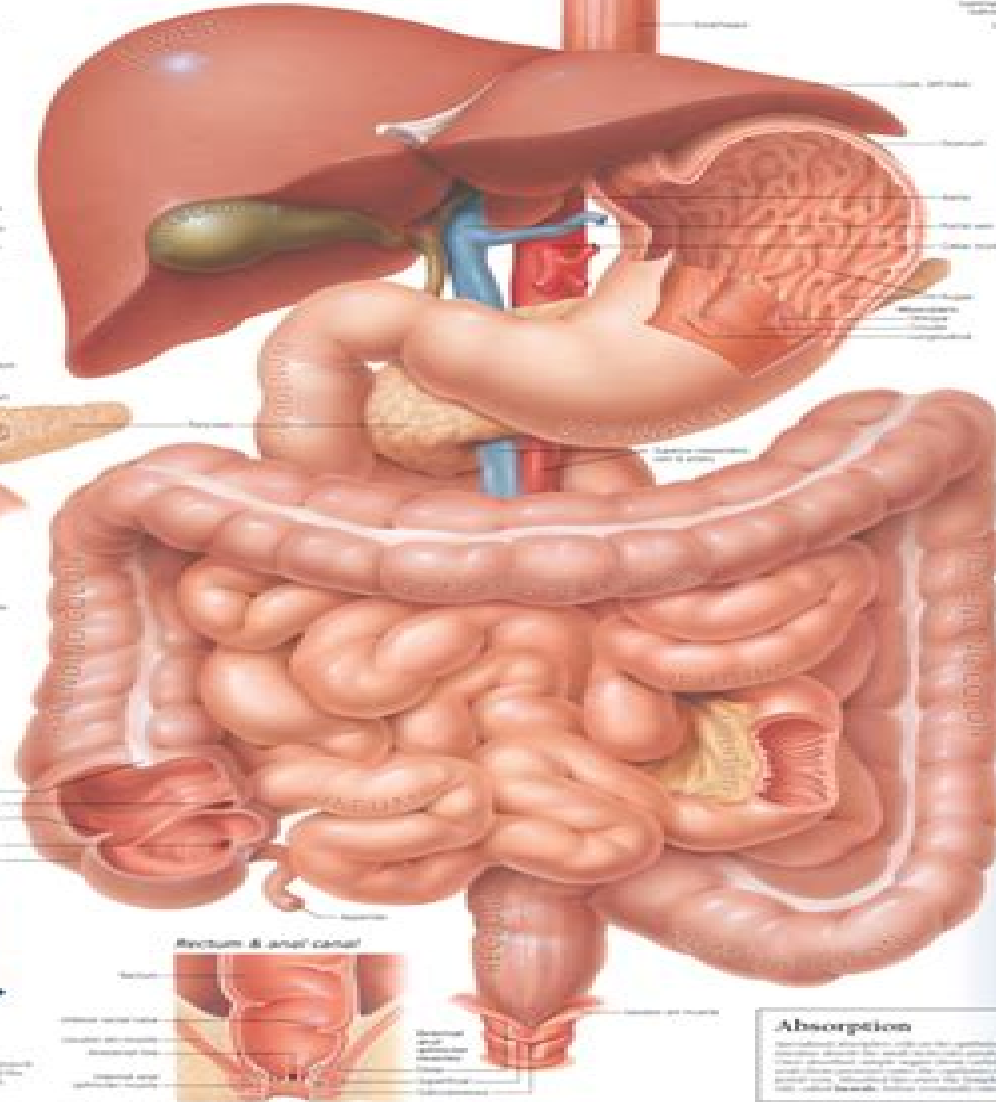

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the ascending colon, the transverse colon, the descending colon, the sigmoid colon, and the rectum. The large intestine is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the undigested food, forming the feces.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful muscular contractions called peristalsis. These contractions are initiated by the enteric nervous system and the autonomic nervous system, which also control the rate of peristalsis.

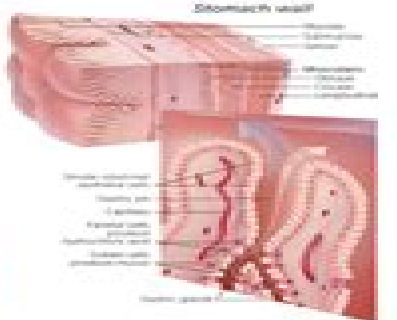

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing, the mechanical action of the food, is called mastication. The tongue, which is a muscular organ, is used to move the food into the mouth. The salivary glands, which are located in the mouth, secrete saliva, which is used to moisten the food and to begin the process of digestion.

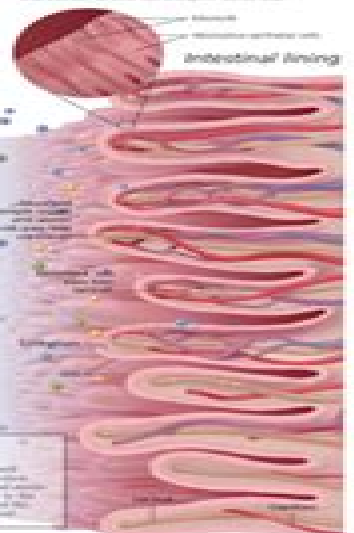

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for storing and mixing food with gastric juices. The stomach is divided into two main parts: the cardia, which is the entrance to the stomach, and the pylorus, which is the exit. The stomach wall is composed of several layers, including the mucosa, submucosa, muscularis, and serosa.

Small intestine

The small intestine is a long, coiled organ that is responsible for the majority of the digestion and absorption of nutrients. It is divided into three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. The small intestine is characterized by its highly convoluted structure, which increases the surface area for absorption.

Absorption

The process of absorption involves the transport of nutrients from the small intestine into the bloodstream. This process occurs in the villi, which are small, finger-like projections that increase the surface area for absorption. The villi are lined with a single layer of epithelial cells, which are responsible for the absorption of nutrients.
