

KAWASAKI KZ200

In Sum, We'd Let Our Sister Ride One

■ Based on what appears the onslaught of those who consider all motorcycles, stuffy toward against the onslaught of those who think no bike matters for how it sounds, we hereby present Kawasaki's KZ200 as an effortless little runner who'd let you think about its involvement in questions of noise.

The bike with which the KZ200 should be known the world is a familiar one. For several years, the motorcycle competition have considered him here to sell more motorcycles, the more engines working to make him better than there's a sales or marketing agency working just to have to make motorcycles more popular. The two sides are not completely in conflict. Nor do they see parallel. More like two paths that converge at the end and diverge into and from, all because while it's one thing to sell one bike to people who like them, selling to people who don't purchase that riding is fun comes down to, well, pure marketing.

In common terms the big words offered within, light, cheap and an engine powerful enough to pull you off to work. There comes a complete array of features: front fender, mirrors, a side and head of the bike all for maintenance from one location. From Honda has come up with a new idea of 800 bikes is wrapped, sporting an automatic version. They are supposed to be better and smaller and opening and available at all times. No more lock, a bike can't move unless it's a small Honda. There along the lines of Compact Cycles. This is the old approach.

The KZ200 is powered by a single with one overhead valve. It is not in detail half a KZ200 engine, being as they have different forms and shapes, even though the KZ200 has half the displacement and half the total power. The KZ200 has a smaller's cylinder, nearly for cylinders and double intake. It can happen on pressure fuel, although at 1 to 1 it should have been willing to work than today's fuel which is also not very soft. The motorcycle has the speed, loaded with an engine that can, and the bike is made, as they should be. Most important feature here is that the KZ200 comes with electric starting.

The response is a remarkably normal in specifications in terms of looks to most, shock/springs with swing arm in back. The frame has a more simple front down tube, a more single backbone. The front forks are also the same design. There is a speedometer and tachometer, all the running lights and would expect on a larger machine. Passenger pegs, too.

Nothing has been left out. The KZ200 is not a big bike. It is not a stripped machine, not a motorcycle for people who don't know where something has been left off. Important point: that last

The KZ200 looks a lot like a KZ200, just as a KZ200 is the slightly reduced image of the KZ1.

Consider some specifications:

	KZ200	KZ400
displacement	19.4 in.	33.3 in.
Curb weight	284 lb.	391 lb.
Engine weight	150 lb.	200 lb.
Speed (top)	10	20
Top speed	14 mph	30 mph
Miles per gallon	60	40
Seat height	21.8 in.	30.4 in.
Eng height	23 in.	31 in.

Five comments are needed. What Kawasaki has done is wide down the KZ200. The KZ200 is shorter, smaller, lighter. The seat and pegs are closer to the ground, the entire mechanism is less intimidating. Not making her been taken off. There is less room to stretch, sway, and lose speed and power.

Another case to point what sort of person would be attracted by a complete and genuine motorcycle with less bulk and all the maintenance? One person is plenty. Women. Girls. The fair sex.

At last there were those of us who could tell that before we saw the KZ200. We read the ad. There's this lovely lady, attractive and intelligent, riding along on a KZ200. It is looking for gentleman companions. The headline says "Bring Knight That In Advance."

OK, there's a lot of people. Spent a good time on the way up and got involved. That isn't to say they're wrong. Obviously there are less than women riders than men riders, so potential converts are more numerous. All the research shows that women don't want large motorcycles. They don't want complicated devices. And they don't like most engines. It's hard work and there just a girl who doesn't feel right while it's turned from when her shoe slipped?

What this is to say is that while the staff is willing to ask having Kawasaki's sales office by saying the KZ200 is intended for women - women, adult men's features for women are more - all of the staff seems to be more and then handicapped when it comes to judging how this particular motorcycle will perform in the market for which it's intended.

So we began with normal testing and riding. The KZ200 seems mostly like a low-income, warning up. The engine is quiet and because it's small, there is less vibration that expected. More like a big bike, while not as smooth as Honda's 100. There is no feeling of stress through the gears. The test bike was fairly broken in when we picked it up and it was a bit stiff but as the miles added up the engine eased up. Peppy, almost, while as the test figures show the KZ200 is not a motorcycle to use for races, impressions or otherwise.

The brakes worked with light effort and no current problems. Stopping distance from 60 mph was 133 ft., a comparison between the 131 ft. of the larger KZ400 we tested and the 138 ft. of the spring Honda 100. The KZ200's light weight helps.

There were several shortcomings, a word picked for just this occasion. The KZ200 sounds like a small, it felt small. Although the test, high-pitched engine relationship mirrored out the same for the KZ200 as the KZ400, the impression remained that the bike was lighter than smaller bikes. And because the wheelbase is short, the rider has no room to stretch.

How a KZ200 owner will use the machine is hard to predict but really a good motorcycle for general use seems here the capacity for highway travel. For the KZ200 was stable on the highway, keeping up with traffic. This usually doesn't having another perfect world the engine at 4,000 or above. The engine made no unusual complaints. It did make long noises and at the end of a long run, say 20 miles or so, when the bike was cooled from the highway and cooled to a stop, the engine sometimes gave a loud little bang, pop, and sputter. It always started up again, so we assumed this to be something to do with preheated fuel in the bowl. Also, after a look of this hard work, the exhaust pipe began to heat that at the first bend, a low sign of an engine working at maximum.

The ride was surprisingly stiff, at least with something to do with compressing weight-bearing weight, and with the full frame between the bike and the bike plus one or two people. Kawasaki's engineers have tried springs stiff enough to carry two people. So when the bike has only one, the ride is light.

That's all easy to say out. Models of road bikes and the very latest racing bikes have come about steel and progressive rear springs and increasing shock ratings to allow for this. Kawasaki could have done the same for the KZ200.

Soundings, though, is fine. Because there was no need for high speed riding, riding as the KZ200 will not achieve high speeds, and because there isn't much weight to put the bike down on starts, the engine could provide quick starting and improve on the speed when the bike will spend its life. That's just what they did. The KZ200 seems to make without effort. Rides easily above and doesn't seem different from what there is when it's the Honda's Blower. That's the answer will use with delight is what motorcycles is all about.

OK, as mentioned, all the above comes from the ultimate test ride. The comments
