where does the word biology come from?	three greek roots "bio", meaning "life", and "logy", meaning "the study of"
What are organisms?	living things characteristics of organisms	organisms acquire and use materials and energy organisms actively maintain organized complexity organisms sense and respond to stimuli organisms grow organisms reproduce organisms, collectively, evolve cell	basic unit of life plasma membrane	separates each cell from its surroundings enclosing a huge variety of structures and chemicals in a fluid environment (plasma membrane is enclosed in a protective cell wall in microorganisms and plants) unicellular	most abundant organisms on earth exist as single cells multicellular	qualities of life are more visual here organisms made up of 2 or more cells
Where do organisms obtain the materials that make up their bodies?	from the air water soil and sometimes the bodies of other living things
Does life create or destroy matter?	life does neither. Life neither create or destroys matter, matter is simply recycled energy	organisms need and use it continuously in order to live sunlight	all the energy that sustains life comes from sunlight photosynthesis	the way that some organisms capture solar energy directly. Energy from the sunlight is trapped and stored for plants and many single celled organisms through this process.
homeostasis	the ability of an organism to maintain its internal environment within the limits required to sustain life how do living things maintain homeostasis	cell membranes constantly pump specific substances in and others out. Life requires very precise internal conditions maintained by continuous expenditure of energy to obtain energy and nutrients organisms must...	sense and respond to stimuli in their environments
How do animals sense and respond to stimuli in their environments	animals use specialized cells to detect light temperature sound gravity touch chemicals and many other stimuli from their external and internal surroundings do organisms grow?	yes every organism grows sometime in its life
In what ways do organisms reproduce?	dividing in half, producing seeds, bearing life young and producing eggs
What is the end result of reproduction?	new versions of the parent organisms that inherit the instructions for producing and maintaining their particular for of life
Deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA)	the set of instructions for a living beings cells that is inherited from parents (is in every cell) (provides a detailed instruction manual for life) (kind of like a blue print)
