

Note #237 - G.M. Vehicle Anti-Theft System (V.A.T.S.) Interface

- In 1985 General Motors introduced a vehicle security system called the Vehicle Anti-Theft System (V.A.T.S.). The V.A.T.S. system is an engine starter disable switch which will prevent the vehicle from starting unless the proper key is used to start the vehicle. Since 1985 the V.A.T.S. has been used in the Camaro and other vehicles because of ease of use and effectiveness. The V.A.T.S. is still being installed as standard equipment on the Camaro and Camaro and is also being used on several other newer model vehicles. However, General Motors has enhanced the operation of the system since the introduction of the V.A.T.S. The newer system is basically the same, but it also includes a fuel system shut off along with starter disable. The newer system is called the PassKeyII and can be found on the newer model vehicles.

- Both the V.A.T.S. and the PassKeyII system basically operate the same. The ignition key used in the vehicle has a coded resistor pellet molded into the key. The resistor pellet is 1 of 15 different resistor pellets used by General Motors on this system. There is a small harness with two wires usually White 24 gauge wire shielded in an orange sleeve, which leads the ignition switch to a computer which reads the resistance of the pellet in the key. If the resistance is correct, the computer will allow the vehicle to start. If the resistance is incorrect, the computer will not allow the vehicle to start.

- The V.A.T.S. and the PassKeyII system can cause problems when remote starting because the key with the coded resistor pellet, is not being used to start the vehicle. In order to be able to remote start a vehicle with one of these systems, the V.A.T.S. or PassKeyII computer must "see" the same resistor value (or within 18%) as the resistor in the key. This can be done by equating a resistor of the same value as the resistor in the key and pre-wiring this resistor value in the wires which line the ignition switch to the computer. The value of the resistor pellet in the key can be found by using a Volt/Ohm meter. Touch each side of the resistor pellet, with the probes from the meter, being careful not to touch the ends of the probe with your hands. The meter may have to be set to a multiplier of up to 100k to read the resistor value. Note: General Motors only used 15 different resistor codes, the table below lists all of these resistor values and the colors codes of the bands on these resistors. Once the resistor value is found, equate a resistor of the same value and follow the diagram below to interface the resistor with the system to allow a remote start to operate successfully.

G.M.'s Key Number	Value (Ohms)	Color Code of Bands on Resistor (2% Tolerance)
1	392	Orange . White . Red . Black
2	523	Green . Red . Orange . Black
3	581	Blue . Gray . Brown . Black
