

Argumentative Essay on Bullying

Bullying is a widespread problem in schools a positive psychological and psychological impact on students-if. It leads to short-term and long-term outcomes, including concentration problems, learning difficulties, mental problems, depression, anxiety, etc. It may consist of threats, verbal and physical abuse, sarcasm, insults, and so on. There is no consensus among scholars and educators on how such misconduct should be prevented and punished. Personally, its complexity requires a collaborative approach, which means that parents, teachers, and students themselves need to be involved. Solutions to bullying in schools vary widely. Some parents and teachers believe that the situation is not hopeless for the lives of insignificant children. Many of them have been bullied and believe it is widespread in schools.

This attitude is hazardous because it discourages children from reporting incidents of abuse and leaving them face to face with their abusers. Some schools bear a tremendous degree of responsibility for ending bullying. They do not promote this type of behavior by imposing sanctions on victims and providing psychological support to victims. Student education is another typical approach to bullying, and some educational institutions offer bullying lectures.

Collaborating with bullies can also bring good results and because these students often need psychological support to overcome anger. Teachers, parents, and students working together is the most effective approach to the problem of bullying in schools. It is not enough to give talks while parents fail to give their children adequate attention and support at home.

Similarly, sanctions will not bring long-term consequences unless students are aware of the adverse effects of their behavior and know how to stop bullying in their groups. Parental education may also be effective because some families are unemployed.

They see the importance of the problem and may not see their children's requirements. As a result, schools, parents, and students must collaborate to eliminate bullying and make school a safer environment.

There is no unanimity among scholars and educators as to how this dysfunctional behaviour should be prevented and punished. As far as I am concerned, its complex nature requires a
