

Argumentative Essay on Health Care

The issue of health reform did not start when President Obama took office. The debate about health care is still ongoing. There have been many attempts to bring about change in health care. Past attempts have failed due to weak states, insufficient persuasion, differences of opinion, and perhaps the complexity of the matter. The reform issue was started in the 1800s but was first discussed in the 1930s. The Great Recession was a significant factor in this. This is because many people were unemployed and could not afford health care. So there was a need for affordable health care.

The issue of health care reform has been taken up differently by Republicans and Democrats. Republicans believe that health care reforms will mean more taxes for the rich in society. They think it is the rich who create jobs. If they are taxed too much, they will no longer be able to create jobs and invest. They say that if the program is to be launched, it should not cost the hard work of the rich. This could be punishing a rich group in society. Another view of the Republicans is that the pictures are entirely wrong. They believe that the government should not be overly concerned about the health of its citizens. They think people should work to get what they want out of life. Another issue for the Republicans is the lack of a US budget. They argue that health care reforms will be made at the expense of an already slow budget.

Democrats' views on health care coverage are part of America's ancestral promise. They believe that every citizen should have access to quality health care. They think posting based on family or gender issues should not be canceled. Another problem they are promoting is that health care should not be private. American adults should not be made to pay for the neediest in society. They believe that all Americans should care for those with less social status. A third issue that Democrats promote is that they encourage more excellent coverage and reduce the cost of health care. They believe that more people should get health care at reduced and affordable prices.

The ANC opposes the proposed reforms in health care. They disapprove of the way health care is provided. This is something that creates tension in congress.

Former United States presidents have had differing views on health care reforms. Many presidents wanted to move from a national type of health care to a more comprehensive one linked to public safety. Roosevelt and Truman failed to deliver this launch in the healthcare sector. This was because employers were offering better benefits, and there were promises that it would get better over time. There was no cooperation with the big companies, and the changes failed. President Clinton came up with the issue of reform in the 1990s. He came up with the Health Security Act, which applies worldwide, and the government will be mandated to administer it. He indicated that costs would be significantly reduced. Many people support part of Clinton's initiative but wait for features they do not want to be changed before entirely keeping it. Under President Obama, there are still issues that need to be addressed in the health care reform process.

Some steps have been taken to change it. The Obama administration has succeeded in keeping people from being excluded from any inclusion because of pre-existing conditions.
