

One of the clearest signals which we can give to the horse to make him change his leg at the canter, is shifting the weight of our body from the side of the leading fore leg, to that of the non-leading one; for by doing so, we disturb the balance of the horse's body so much, that to regain it, he will be obliged to change his leg.

Fig. 110. —Period of canter or gallop when weight of horse and rider is borne by leading fore leg.

In circling, as well as in turning, the track of the hind feet should be the same as that of the fore feet, and the animal's head, neck, and body should as nearly as possible follow the direction in which the circle or turn is being made.

Some people think that a horse, when cantering, should lead only with the off fore, and that breakers should train their equine pupils to invariably do so. A slight study of
