Annual Marketing Report And Bank:

The great leap forward: The marketing of banking services in China Carla Vieira, 2005-04-08 Inhaltsangabe

Abstract Generally speaking economic growth is closely related to the efficiency of a country's financial markets. That is the more varied the investment alternatives by which economic resources can flow within a country and between countries the more efficient the financial market. This efficiency leads to a higher level of capital formation and improved capital utilisation thereby increasing the utility of both savers and borrowers and promoting economic growth. In line with its transition to a market economy China has amongst other reforms embarked on a reform of its financial system transforming its one bank monopoly into an integrated system of many banks and other specialised financial institutions. The resulting market complexity and the emergence of domestic and international competition gave rise to the marketing of financial services in China. Despite banks increasing marketing sophistication and higher spending on marketing consumer behaviour is only beginning to react to it. On one hand the emergence of a wide variety of financial institutions and financial products has offset the impact of the social system reform on individuals' lives. On the other hand most Chinese still stay with one of the four wholly state owned commercial banks perhaps out of habit perhaps from a feeling of security with their old banks. The effect on banks has been dramatic: service levels have improved greatly while product quality and variety have become better. However the lack of market segmentation partly due to government regulation limits banks' abilities to effectively target consumer groups which also hinders consumers' information gathering and decision making. Transformation of banking is hindered by China's poorly performing corporate sector which strongly undermines banking profitability. China remains one of the weakest countries in terms of strength of the financial sector. Moody's and the imminent WTO entry might result in disarray in the financial industry. Foreign banks with their sophisticated marketing have already put strong pressure on their Chinese counterparts who are learning quickly. In the long run the WTO entry and increased openness of the financial market will increase the competitiveness of the marketplace and enhance the development of the marketing of financial services in China. This dissertation will be divided into two parts. In the first part I will be talking about China's The Routledge Companion to Financial Services Marketing Tina Harrison, Hooman Estelami, 2014-12-05 Interest in Financial Services Marketing has grown hugely over the last few decades particularly since the financial crisis which scarred the industry and its relationship with customers. It reflects the importance of the financial services industry to the economies of every nation and the realisation that the consumption and marketing of financial services differs from that of tangible goods and indeed many other intangible services. This book is therefore a timely and much needed comprehensive compendium that reflects the development and maturation of the research domain and pulls together in a single volume the current state of thinking and debate. The events associated with the financial crisis have highlighted that there is a need for banks and other financial institutions to understand how to rebuild trust and confidence, improve relationships and derive value from the marketing process Edited by an international team of experts this book will provide the latest thinking on how to manage such challenges and will be vital reading for students and lecturers in financial services marketing policy makers and practitioners
