Course Overview

The Accounting Information Systems (AIS) module will teach you the fundamentals of business transaction processing and how information technology is applied to automate transaction processing, collect and store data, and generate useful information to support decision makers. The course begins with transaction processing in a manual system, moves to transaction processing in an integrated Enterprise Resource Planning (ERP) system and concludes with design and development of accounting software and databases. The course addresses the efficient design processes and use of technology to create an effective internal control environment. The course requires you to use your critical thinking, analytical, technology, and communication skills. These skills will serve you well as you advance your career in the accounting profession.

This course involves very few mathematical calculations—a calculator is not needed nor required for examinations and in-class exercises except the SUA in-class exercise. Most cases and problems are text format and your responses require thoughtful, comprehensive written text. Consequently, your English comprehension and writing skills will be a critical success factor in this course.
