

The American Dream: Overview

The American Dream: Money, Success, and A Home The American Dream changes over time, always based on society. In the 40's and 50's the American Dream was to have a white picket fence, a dog, a two parent home, and a couple of children. Today, it's a little bit different, the American Dream is to have money, cars, fame and success. The things I would have to say would never change about the American Dream and what it consists of would be money, success, and a home.

The American Dream consists of money. I would have to say the American Dream consists of money because in today's society of money because in today's society money talks. The more money you have, the more power you have. Money and power are what bring some advantages in America. It allows you to get your house, your cars, and your connections (the people you know). The American Dream today is to have all these things, when you have money and power you tend to think you're invincible and at times in society you are.

With all of this money and power you're not going to keep it a secret. Which brings me to my next topic, in which the American Dream consists of. Success and fame more importantly Success. The American Dream consists of success because in society seems to be one of the main goals. In everything we do we are told to succeed. Whether be sports, education, and our jobs. So it wouldn't be a wonder that being successful and known would be a part of the American Dream.

Although gaining success would be reaching a personal goal and gaining money and power, success will not get you the last thing the American Dream consists of... A home. Through all the years and times one thing has continued to be wanted and dreamed up, and that is a home. Not a house, not a mansion, but a home. A home is made up of love, care, and kindness. Everybody dreams of having a home with a moderate sized family filled with love and compassion. A secure, serene, and yet free environment.

That is a home, one of the things that the American Dream is made of. In conclusion, The American Dream has changed over the times, but some things are clear. the dream is to have money, success, and a home. Money to gain power, and with that money and power comes success and fame. All those things can never get you a home though. What does society say about what the American Dream consists of? Society says the American Dream should say that you should have almost nothing but money. Money, big mansions, a whole bunch of cars.

To hang out with the celebs and just be famous and known The American Dream By aminahpeace1998 change about the American Dream and what it consists of would be money, success, today's society money talks. The more money you have, the more power you have. Dream today is to have all these things, when you have money and power you tend to of the main goals. In everything we do we
