World War II, Film, and History John Whiteclay Chambers II, David Culbert, 1996-10-10 The immediacy and perceived truth of the visual image as well as film and television's ability to propel viewers back into the past place the genre of the historical film in a special category. War films including antiwar films have established the prevailing public image of war in the twentieth century. For American audiences the dominant image of trench warfare in World War I has been provided by feature films such as All Quiet on the Western Front and Paths of Glory. The image of combat in the Second World War has been shaped by films like Sands of Iwo Jima and The Longest Day. And despite claims for the alleged impact of widespread television coverage of the Vietnam War it is actually films such as Apocalypse Now and Platoon which have provided the most powerful images of what is seen as the reality of that much disputed conflict. But to what degree does history written with lightning as Woodrow Wilson allegedly said represent the reality of the past? To what extent is visual history an oversimplification or even a distortion of the past? Exploring the relationship between moving images and the society and culture in which they were produced and received, World War II Film and History addresses the power these images have had in determining our perception and memories of war. Examining how the public memory of war in the twentieth century has often been created more by a manufactured past than a remembered one, a leading group of historians discusses films dating from the early 1930s through the early 1990s created by filmmakers the world over from the United States and Germany to Japan and the former Soviet Union. For example, Freda Freiberg explains how the inter-racial melodramatic Japanese feature film China Nights in which a manly and protective Japanese naval officer falls in love with a beautiful young Chinese street waif and molds her into a cultured submissive wife proved enormously popular with wartime Japanese and helped justify the invasion of China in the minds of many Japanese viewers. Peter Paret assesses the historical accuracy of Kolberg as a depiction of an unsuccessful siege of that German city by a French Army in 1807 and explores how the film released by Hitler's regime in January 1945 explicitly called for civilian sacrifice and last ditch resistance. Stephen Ambrose contrasts what we know about the historical reality of the Allied D Day landings in Normandy on June 6, 1944 with the 1962 release of The Longest Day in which the major climactic moment in the film never happened at Normandy. Alice Kessler Harris examines The Life and Times of Rosie the Riveter, a 1982 film documentary about women defense workers on the American home front in World War II, emphasizing the degree to which the documentary's engaging main characters and its message of the need for fair and equal treatment for women resonates with many contemporary viewers. And Clement Alexander Price contrasts Men of Bronze, William Miles's fine documentary about black American soldiers who fought in France in World War I with Liberators, the controversial documentary by Miles and Nina Rosenblum which incorrectly claimed that African American troops liberated Holocaust survivors at Dachau in World War II. In today's visually oriented world, powerful images even images of images are circulated in an eternal cycle, gaining increased acceptance through repetition. History becomes an endless loop in which repeated images validate and reconfirm each other. Based on archival materials many of which have become only recently available World War II Film and History offers an informative and a disturbing look at the complex relationship between national myths and filmic memory as well as the dangers of visual images being transformed into reality

Making Asian American Film and Video Jun Okada, 2015-03-06 The words Asian American film might evoke a painfully earnest low budget documentary or family drama destined to be seen only in small film festivals or on PBS Public Broadcasting Service In her groundbreaking study of the past fifty years of Asian American film and video Jun Okada demonstrates that although this stereotype is not entirely unfounded a remarkably diverse range of Asian American filmmaking has emerged Yet Okada also reveals how the legacy of institutional funding and the PBS style unites these filmmakers whether they are working within that system or setting themselves in opposition to its conventions Making Asian American Film and Video explores how the genre has served as a flashpoint for debates about what constitutes Asian American identity Tracing a history of how Asian American film was initially conceived as a form of public interest media part of a broader effort to give voice to underrepresented American minorities Okada shows why this seemingly well intentioned project inspired deeply ambivalent responses In addition she considers a number of Asian American filmmakers who have opted out of producing state funded films from Wayne Wang to Gregg Araki to Justin Lin Okada gives us a unique behind the scenes look at the various institutions that have bankrolled and distributed Asian American films revealing the dynamic interplay between commercial and state run media More than just a history of Asian Americans in film Making Asian American Film and Video is an insightful meditation on both the achievements and the limitations of institutionalized multiculturalism

A History of the American Film, 1978 The History of Sex in American Film Jody Pennington, 2007-07-30 Although American films especially Hollywood fare are often belittled for their one dimensional portrayal of sex a close examination of the history of sex in American motion pictures reveals that American cinema has actually represented sex in myriad ways A more complete understanding of the ways in which sex has been represented onscreen requires an approach that pays equal attention to cinematic techniques and to the diversity of sexual values and behaviors in American society It is necessary to frame this discussion within the multiple contradictions of an industry that has both repressed and represented sex with equal fervor over the course of its history of audiences that have both taken offense at and flocked to films with sexual themes and a body politic that has regulated the sexual in popular culture even as its discourse has been saturated with sexual images and topics The History of Sex in American Cinema moves seamlessly between general film and social history to clarify how exactly sex has been expressed cinematically and how we have responded to those expressions as a culture In March of 1965 the Supreme Court put into motion legal changes that marked the end of local film censorship as it had existed since the early years of the twentieth century In Hollywood that same year The Pawnbroker was released with a Production Code Seal of Approval despite nudity that violated that Code As sexual liberation occurred onscreen parallel developments occurred in the way we lived our lives and by the end of the 1960s Americans were having sex more often and with more partners than ever before There was also now a public debate surrounding sexuality and one of the loudest and most continually active voices in this debate was that of American film This work begins with an examination of some of the earliest altercations in what later came to be known as the culture wars and follows those skirmishes more often than not provoked by American film up to the modern day By looking at how sex in the cinema has contributed to the demise of the fragile consensus between liberals and conservatives on freedom of expression The History of Sex in American Film suggests a perspective from which today s culture wars can be better understood This work combines close readings of many representative films including Who s Afraid of Virginia Woolf The Graduate Blue Velvet Philadelphia L A Confidential and Closer with a social and historical account of the most significant changes in American sexual behavior and sexual representation over the past fifty years

American History/American Film John E. O'Connor, Martin A. Jackson, 2016-10-06 In this pioneering work sixteen historians analyse individual films for deeper insight into US institutions values and lifestyles Linking all of the essays is the belief that film holds much of value for the historian seeking to understand and interpret American history and culture This title will be equally valuable for students and scholars in history using film for analysis as well as film students and scholars exploring the way social and historical circumstances are reflected and represented in film

Russian War Films Denise Jeanne Youngblood, 2007 A panoramic survey of nearly a century of Russian films on wars and wartime from World War I to more recent conflicts in Afghanistan and Chechnya with heavy emphasis on films pertaining to World War II
