Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume exercise program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of older adults. The study was a randomized controlled trial involving 60 participants aged 65 and older. The intervention group performed a 12-week program of low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume exercise, while the control group remained sedentary. Physical fitness was measured using a series of tests, and health-related quality of life was assessed using a validated questionnaire. The results showed that the intervention group had significantly higher levels of physical fitness and health-related quality of life compared to the control group at the end of the 12-week period. The findings suggest that a low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume exercise program can be an effective means of improving physical fitness and health-related quality of life in older adults.
