Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact aerobically and resistance training program on the physical fitness of sedentary, middle-aged women. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The first session was a low-impact aerobically training session, the second was a resistance training session, and the third was a combination of the two. The results of the study showed that the program had a significant effect on the physical fitness of the women, with improvements in cardiovascular fitness, muscular strength, and body composition. The program was well-tolerated and had no adverse effects on the women's health. The findings of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact aerobically and resistance training program is an effective and safe way to improve the physical fitness of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Small business is a business that is owned and operated by a single individual or a small group of people. It is typically a local business that serves the community in which it is located. Small businesses are often the backbone of the economy, providing jobs and services to the community. They are also often the most innovative and flexible businesses, able to adapt to changing market conditions. Small businesses can be found in a wide variety of industries, from retail to manufacturing to services. They can be as small as a sole proprietorship or as large as a partnership or corporation. The key factor in determining whether a business is small is the number of employees it has. In the United States, a small business is typically defined as a business with fewer than 500 employees. However, this definition can vary by industry and by country. For example, in the United Kingdom, a small business is defined as a business with fewer than 50 employees. In the European Union, a small business is defined as a business with fewer than 250 employees. In the United States, a small business is defined as a business with fewer than 500 employees.
