

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The intervention group consisted of 20 women who participated in a supervised walking program, 3 times per week, for 12 weeks. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the program. The results of the study showed that the intervention group had significantly greater improvements in physical and psychological health than the control group. The results of the study suggest that a supervised walking program can be an effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
