

Transition Guide

Transition can be a time of fear for young people. Ensuring that young people have a positive transition can be a significant challenge and one that should be a priority for all schools. A successful transition ensures young people are happy, engaged and ready to learn. It reduces the number of behavioural and attendance issues which can be problematic for both the young person and the school.

Here are some suggestions to create a positive transition experience for all young children.

- Create a memory booklet of the young person's experiences in their old setting, in which transition activities can be added. This can be used by the children's practitioners, or can be used as a comfort and keepsake for the child at home.
- Ensure to be welcomed by school staff in a familiar setting. For young people with a learning difference, this can be a challenge. Ensure that the young person is given a tour of the school, including the main office, library, etc. and discuss strategies for getting lost and help any anxieties the children may have.
- Encourage transition visits from previous schools to share ideas and strategies. Children can learn from each other and from the staff.
- Ask the staff to come and spend time getting to know the children at their old settings. For young people with a learning difference, this can be a challenge. Ensure that the young person is given a tour of the school, including the main office, library, etc. and discuss strategies for getting lost and help any anxieties the children may have.

Transition Guide

Transition of any kind can be difficult for young people. Ensuring that young people have a positive transition both through school and to different schools is key. A successful transition ensures young people are happy, engaged and ready to learn. It reduces the number of behavioural and attendance issues which can be problematic for both the young person and the school.

Here are some suggestions to create a positive transition experience for all young children.

- Create a memory booklet of the young person's experiences in their old setting or school. This memory booklet can be taken with them and used by the children's practitioners, or can be used as a comfort and keepsake for the child at home.
- Create a fun and interesting treasure hunt around the building so young people are able to find where all classrooms are located. Ask the children to find key locations such as the main office, dining hall, library, etc. and discuss strategies for getting lost and help any anxieties the children may have.
- Encourage transition visits from previous schools to share ideas and strategies. Children can learn from each other and from the staff.
- Ask key staff to come and spend time getting to know the children at their old settings. The young people will then have a familiar face to go to when

Interprofessional Working in Practice: Learning and Working Together for Children and Families Lyn Trodd, Leo Chivers, 2011-09-16 Interprofessional working is one of the key subjects taught across early years education health and social care programmes as a result of the move towards a more integrated practice for children Written by a multi professional team of contributors and grounded by their experience in interprofessional work this book relates the rhetoric of interprofessionalism to discussions and examples of practice The authors draw on their experiences of a wide range of practice heritages and contexts to propose that a new professionalism is required in an interprofessional world They emphasize that it is only by using interprofessional understanding and awareness when engaging with practice issues that professionals will develop the safety and quality in work with children that is now required The book argues that individuals cannot learn to work effectively in the complex ever changing world of services for children and families without first gaining understanding of interprofessionalism and internalizing appropriate values and principles The book offers new thinking on the challenges of interprofessional working including exploration of leading in uncertainty and its underpinning principles and values Key features of the book also include Chapters grouped into related strands of context learning working and current and future challenges Case studies and practice dilemmas designed to challenge the reader Reflexivity points Interprofessional Working in Practice is essential reading for all professionals students and academics linked to Children s Services Contributors Sharif Al Rousi Annie Clouston Ian Duckmanton Sally Graham Joy Jarvis Karen John Maureen Longley Daryl Maisey Paty Paliokosta Anne Rawlings Sajni Sharma Ute Ward Sue Webster Contributors Sharif Al Rousi Annie Clouston Ian Duckmanton Sally Graham Joy Jarvis Karen John Maureen Longley Daryl Maisey Paty Paliokosta Anne Rawlings Sajni Sharma Ute Ward Sue Webster

Supporting people with autism through adulthood Great Britain: National Audit Office,2009-06-05 Autism which includes Asperger syndrome is a lifelong condition which affects the way in which people interact with the world around them There are estimated to be 400 000 adults with autism in England many of whom may require specialised support Yet the NAO found that most NHS organisations and local authorities do not know how many people with autism there are in the areas they serve and three quarters of local authorities do not have a specific commissioning strategy for adults with autism GPs and social care staff have low awareness of autism and how to diagnose it with 80 per cent of GPs surveyed reporting that they need additional guidance and training in order to identify and treat patients with autism more effectively Around 200 000 adults with autism do not have a learning disability This group often fails to secure appropriate support as health and social care services are traditionally configured for people with a learning disability a physical illness or disability or a mental health problem which autism is not Three quarters of local authorities said adults with autism who do not meet eligibility criteria experience or report difficulties accessing the services they require Almost two thirds felt that current services for adults with autism are limited Providing specialised support could improve outcomes for this group of people and their carers and potentially enhance value for money as the costs of establishing such support could be outweighed over time by overall savings There are few specialised employment support services for people with autism A lack of understanding of autism is a significant barrier to gaining employment and more training is needed for those delivering employment support and those administering benefits Building the National Care Service Great Britain.
