else's story is difficult. She tries not to skate on the thin ice of his memories. Darren has done his best. He's studied his daughter like a seismologist on the lookout for waves and surrounded her with everything she might want, everything he can think of at least to be happy. What Clover wants is answers. This summer she thinks she can find them in the second bedroom which is full of her mother's belongings. Volume isn't important; what she is looking for is essence, the undiluted bits, a collection of things that will tell the full story of her mother, her father, and who she is going to be. Make-Believe David Dickinson, 2020-01-01. I will tell you a story that will make you believe in God. No story can guarantee being able to do this. Yet novelists can tell stories that make us think about what we believe about God and why. Despite repeated predictions of the death of the novel, thousands of works of fiction are published and read in Britain each year. Although Western society is less religiously observant than it was many 21st-century novelists persist in pursuing theological, religious, and spiritual themes. Make Believe seeks to explain why. With chapters offering analyses of novels from several genres—so-called literary fiction, historical fiction, science fiction, fantasy, and dystopia—David Dickinson discusses a wide spectrum of novelists. Both those who are avowedly atheistic and those who have a vested interest in perpetuating biblical stories feature. Well-known writers such as Rushdie, McEwan, McCarthy, and Martell rub shoulders with some you may be meeting for the first time. Appealing to literature students and people who simply enjoy reading, whether Christian or not, this study of God in novels invites us to open our minds and allow aspects of our culture to shape our understanding of God and to change our ways of talking about the divine.
