Biome Assessment Study Guide

Biomes: A place characterized by the organisms that live there and determined by the abiotic factors of rainfall and temperature.

A biome can be aquatic (water) or terrestrial (land) and contain one or more ecosystems.

Land Biomes

Temperate deciduous forest- soil is fairly rich and plants cover the forest floor

- most trees are deciduous, losing their leaves in the fall to help conserve water so they can survive winter.

Coniferous/Taiga forest- conifer trees that produce their seeds in cones and do not lose their leaves in fall

- trees conserve water in the winter with the help of needlelike leaves and a waxy coating on their leaves

Tropical rainforests - receive the highest yearly average rainfall

- most biologically diverse (the most different types of plants and animals)
- soil is wet and has poor nutrients

Savanna- large herbivores live and graze on the grass here, scattered clumps of trees

Temperate grasslands have small, wind-tolerant, perennial deep-rooted grasses.

Deserts receive very little water or rainfall, vegetation is sparse.

- animals are adapted to survive with little water

Tundra is a cold, treeless region with low-growing vegetation.

- permafrost prevents roots from growing, which is why small plants survive

The Evolution of American Ecology, 1890-2000 Sharon E. Kingsland, 2005 In the 1890s several initiatives in American botany converged The creation of new institutions such as the New York Botanical Garden coincided with radical reforms in taxonomic practice and the emergence of an experimental program of research on evolutionary problems Sharon Kingsland explores how these changes gave impetus to the new field of ecology that was defined at exactly this time She argues that the creation of institutions and research laboratories coupled with new intellectual directions in science were crucial to the development of ecology as a discipline in the United States The main concern of ecology the relationship between organisms and environment was central to scientific studies aimed at understanding and controlling the evolutionary process Kingsland considers the evolutionary context in which ecology arose especially neo Lamarckian ideas and the new mutation theory and explores the relationship between scientific research and broader theories about social progress and the evolution of human civilization By midcentury American ecologists were leading the rapid development of ecosystem ecology and society in the postwar context foreshadowing the environmental critiques of the 1960s As the ecosystem concept evolved so too did debates about how human ecology should be incorporated into the biological sciences Kingsland concludes with an examination of ecology in the modern urban environment reflecting on how scientists are now being challenged to produce innovative responses to pressing problems The Evolution of American Ecology 1890 2000 offers an innovative study not only of the scientific landscape in turn of the century America but of current questions in ecological science
