

The human skeleton is composed of 206 bones, which are divided into the axial skeleton (skull and spine) and the appendicular skeleton (arms and legs). The bones are made of a hard, mineralized tissue called bone, which is constantly being renewed and repaired. The process of bone formation is called ossification, and it involves the differentiation of mesenchymal cells into osteoblasts, which then deposit calcium and phosphate to form the bone matrix. The bones are connected to each other by joints, which allow for movement. The joints are classified into three types: fibrous joints, cartilaginous joints, and synovial joints. The synovial joints are the most common and allow for the greatest range of motion. The bones are also connected to the muscles and ligaments, which provide support and movement. The skeleton is a complex system that is essential for the human body's structure and function.
