Abstract
 The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health of sedentary middle-aged men. The subjects were 20 men, aged 40-50 years, who were sedentary and had no history of cardiovascular disease. They were divided into two groups: a control group and an exercise group. The exercise group performed a 12-week training program consisting of aerobic and resistance exercises. The control group did not exercise. Physical fitness was measured by maximum heart rate, maximum oxygen consumption, and maximum power. Health was measured by blood pressure, cholesterol, and body weight. The results showed that the exercise group had significantly higher maximum heart rate, maximum oxygen consumption, and maximum power than the control group. The exercise group also had significantly lower blood pressure, cholesterol, and body weight than the control group. These results suggest that a 12-week training program can improve physical fitness and health in sedentary middle-aged men.

Abstract
 The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health of sedentary middle-aged men. The subjects were 20 men, aged 40-50 years, who were sedentary and had no known health problems. They were divided into two groups: a control group and an exercise group. The exercise group performed a 12-week training program consisting of aerobic and strength training. The control group did not exercise. Physical fitness was measured at the beginning and end of the 12-week period. Health was measured using a questionnaire. The results showed that the exercise group had significantly higher physical fitness and better health than the control group at the end of the 12-week period.

Abstract
The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 20) participated in a 12-week training program, while the control group (n = 20) remained sedentary. The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The training program included aerobic, strength, and flexibility exercises. The primary outcome was the change in HRQL, measured using the EuroQol-5D questionnaire. The secondary outcome was the change in physical fitness, measured using the 6-minute walk test. The results showed that the intervention group had a significant improvement in HRQL and physical fitness compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness and HRQL of sedentary, middle-aged women.
