CHAPTER I The Dressmaker s Apprentice at Work There is an assize town in one of the eastern counties which was much distinguished by the Tudor sovereigns and in consequence of their favour and protection attained a degree of importance that surprises the modern traveller A hundred years ago its appearance was that of picturesque grandeur The old houses which were the temporary residences of such of the county families as contented themselves with the gaities of a provincial town crowded the streets and gave them the irregular but noble appearance yet to be seen in the cities of Belgium The sides of the streets had a quaint richness from the effect of the gables and the stacks of chimneys which cut against the blue sky above while if the eye fell lower down the attention was arrested by all kinds of projections in the shape of balcony and oriel and it was amusing to see the infinite variety of windows that had been crammed into the walls long before Mr Pitt s days of taxation The streets below suffered from all these projections and advanced stories above they were dark and ill paved with large round jolting pebbles and with no side path protected by kerb stones there were no lamp posts for long winter nights and no regard was paid to the wants of the middle class who neither drove about in coaches of their own nor were carried by their own men in their own sedans into the very halls of their friends The professional men and their wives the shopkeepers and their spouses and all such people walked about at considerable peril both night and day The broad unwieldy carriages hemmed them up against the houses in the narrow streets The inhospitable houses projected their flights of steps almost into the carriage way forcing pedestrians again into the danger they had avoided for twenty or thirty paces Then at night the only light was derived from the glaring flaring oil lamps hung above the doors of the more aristocratic mansions just allowing space for the passers by to become visible before they again disappeared into the darkness where it was no uncommon thing for robbers to be in waiting for their prey
