

The Digestive System

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food enters through the mouth, is broken down in the stomach, and then moves through the small intestine, where nutrients are absorbed. The digestive system also includes accessory organs that help in the process, such as the liver, pancreas, and gallbladder.

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, digested material enters the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, where it is mixed with bile secreted by the gallbladder. This bile is a strong agent on the material within the duodenum, causing it to move forward. The pancreas, an organ in the abdominal cavity, secretes enzymes that help in the digestion of food. The liver, a large organ in the abdominal cavity, produces bile, which is stored in the gallbladder.

Layers of large intestine

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the appendix, the ascending colon, the transverse colon, the descending colon, the sigmoid colon, and the rectum. The large intestine is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the undigested material, forming the feces.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful muscular contractions called peristalsis. These contractions are initiated by the nervous system and the digestive system itself. The digestive system is a tube, and the food moves through it in a one-way direction.

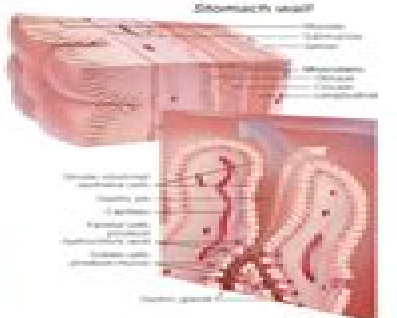

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing, the mechanical action of the food, is carried out by the teeth. The tongue helps in the process. Saliva, a watery fluid secreted by the salivary glands, moistens the food and helps in the digestion of starch. The salivary glands are located in the mouth and the neck. The major salivary glands are the parotid, submandibular, and sublingual glands.

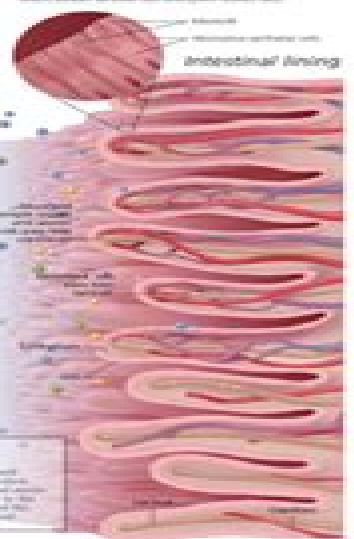

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for the digestion of food. It is located in the upper abdominal cavity. The stomach wall is composed of several layers, including the mucosa, submucosa, muscularis, and serosa. The stomach is divided into the cardia, fundus, and pylorus.

Small intestine

The small intestine consists of three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. It is responsible for the digestion of food and the absorption of nutrients. The small intestine is a long, coiled tube that is about 6 meters long. It is located in the abdominal cavity.

Absorption

The process of absorption is the transfer of nutrients from the digestive tract into the bloodstream. It occurs in the small intestine, where the nutrients are absorbed through the intestinal lining. The nutrients are then transported to the liver, where they are stored or used for energy.
