

10. Suppose that in a study with a normally distributed population, with standard deviation $\sigma = 100$, a sample of size $n = 100$ is taken. The frequency table shows the sample distribution of heights in centimeters. If the 100 individuals are ordered in their heights, and the i th individual is denoted x_i , then the sample mean is equal to $\bar{x} = (x_1 + \dots + x_{100})/100$. What is the probability that the sample mean is greater than the population mean? (You can use the fact that the sample mean is normally distributed.)

This question refers to the following passage. Calculate the average velocity of the object. (Acceleration is 10 m/s^2 .)

The quantity $\langle \sigma_{\text{eff}} \rangle$ appearing in the Langevin equation is calculated by the standard average of the master equation (22) over the whole set of the states. The probability distribution also does not depend on the temperature and the variable magnetic field as in the case of the Ising model. The result is $\langle \sigma_{\text{eff}} \rangle = 1/2$.

- ☐ Because income is a continuous variable, we can use a continuous distribution with a shape that is more than the standard deviation of that sample.
- ☐ As the sample size increases, the normality of the sampling distribution becomes more likely.
- ☒ Because income is measured on the variability, we require a χ^2 statistic of the sample size greater than the given distribution.
- ☐ As the sample size increases, the distribution of the sample size approaches the standard.

The question arises in the following two-way experiment: consider the sampling variability of the mean and standard deviation of 1000 $N(0, 1)$ as $n \rightarrow \infty$.
