

EXPERIMENT-1

Determination of surface tension and parachor value by stalagmometer.

(A) Determination of surface tension by Stalagmometer

Material Required

(BZU.16G-I,18G-III,18SG-I)

Stalagmometer, beakers, thermometer, a rubber tubing with a screw pinch cock, specific gravity, bottle etc.

Theory

"The force acting at a right angle on a unit length along the surface of a liquid is known as surface tension". Its unit is Nm^{-1} or dyne.cm^{-1} .

Consider a molecule in the interior of a liquid. It is being attracted by the neighbouring molecules equally in all directions and hence the resultant force on it is zero. Now consider another molecule at the surface. Here the molecule is not attracted equally in all directions. It is experiencing a net downward force or pull because of greater attraction for the molecules in the liquid than for the molecules in the vapour state above the liquid. This is the case with all molecules at the surface. As a result of this inward pull all the molecules at the surface tends to contract. Hence the liquid surface behaves like a stretched membrane. That is why the liquid surfaces are characterized by their tendency to become as small as possible. This force in the surface of liquid is called as surface tension.

Procedure

- Clean the stalagmometer thoroughly with NaOH to remove grease if any, then with chromic acid and finally with distilled water. Then dry the stalagmometer by passing a current of air.
- Clamp the stalagmometer vertically in a stand and attached a small piece of clean rubber tubing free from dust. Fit a screw pinch cock C near the end of rubber tubing to control the rate of flow of liquid by limiting the influx of air.
- Fill up the stalagmometer by immersing its lower tip in distilled water and sucking on the rubber tubing till the water has risen above mark A. Then close the screw pinch cock.
- Open the pinch cock and adjust it until the rate of fall of drops in 10–15 drops per minute from the end of capillary tube.
- Refill the stalagmometer with distilled water as above without altering the pressure. Then start counting the drops, when the meniscus passes the lower mark B. Repeat the experiment three time and get the mean.
- Now fill the stalagmometer with unknown given liquid & find the number of drops. Take three readings.
