

VIII. CONCLUSION

Co-firing can lead to significant reductions in the environmental impacts of coal-based electricity production. The amount of nearly all air emissions are reduced by firing even small amounts of biomass in the boiler. Additionally, because of avoided decomposition emissions, net green house gas emissions are reduced at rate greater than the rate at which wood is added. The net energy balance of the system is improved because of a reduction in the amount of coal that burned and because, on an energy equivalent basis, preserving biomass residual for the biomass consumes less energy than mining and transporting coal. Consumption of non-renewable resources cut substantially from those levels required when firing coal alone. Finally, solid waste emissions are reduced not only at the plant in the form of boiler ash and flue gas cleanup waste, but also because land filling of available biomass residue is avoided. While existing coal-fired power plant will incur some capital expenses to co-fire biomass, the environmental benefits are significant and may be justified by emission restrictions and consumer desire for cleaner power.
