

The Digestive System

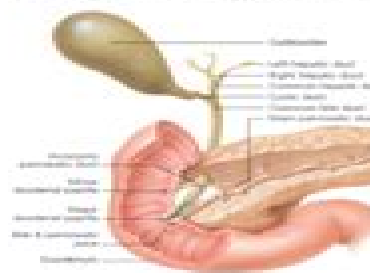

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food is broken down mechanically in the mouth or physically through a series of chemical reactions and enzymatic processes, allowing nutrients to be absorbed. The digestive system also removes indigestible components that must be excreted as waste at the end of the gastrointestinal tract.

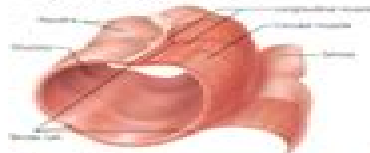

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, digested material enters the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, which is connected to the pancreas by the pancreatic duct. This duct is a branching system on the pancreas where the pancreatic juice secreted by the pancreas enters the duodenum. The gallbladder stores bile secreted by the liver and releases it into the duodenum.

Layers of large intestine

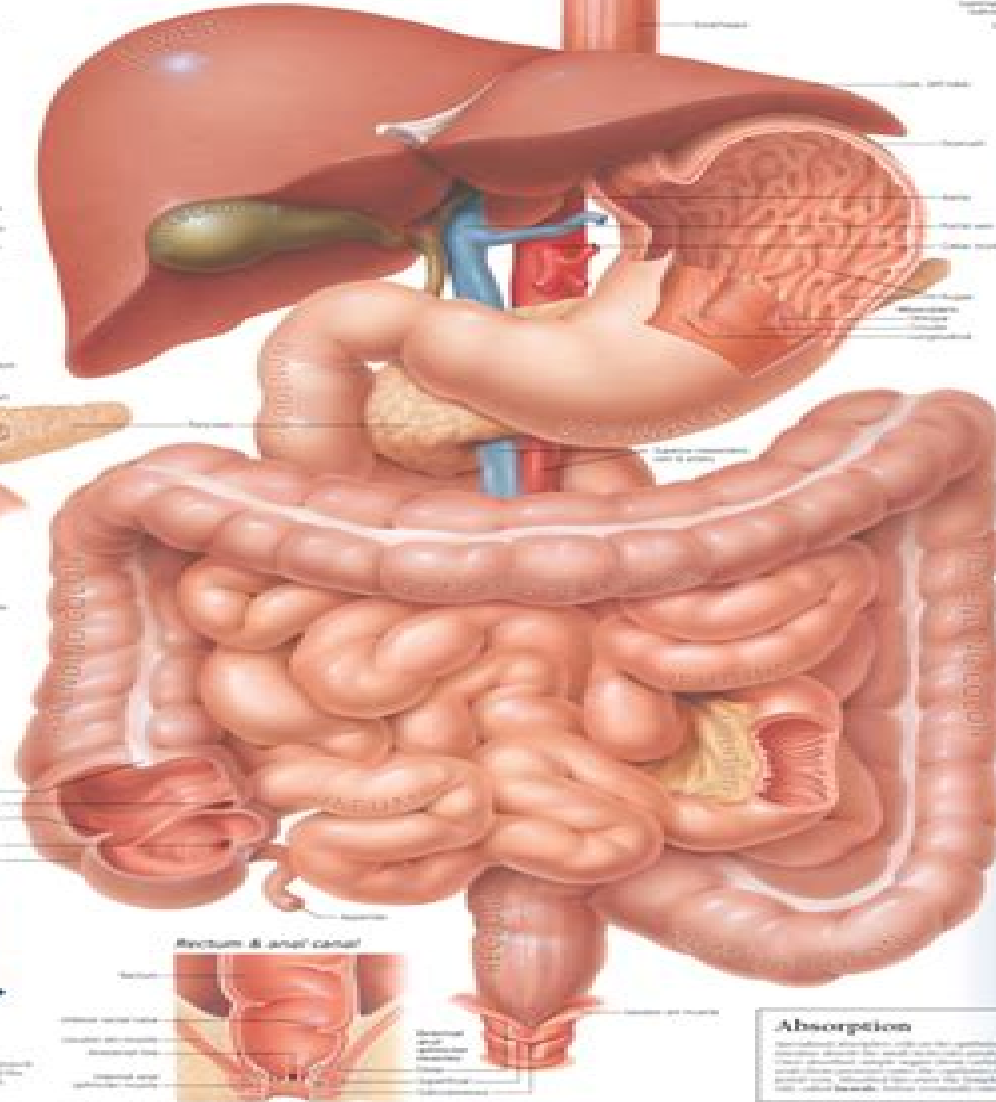

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the caecum, the ascending colon, the transverse colon, the descending colon, the sigmoid colon, and the rectum. The large intestine is responsible for the absorption of water and electrolytes, and the formation of feces.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful muscular contractions called peristalsis. These contractions move the material forward and the food is broken down and absorbed.

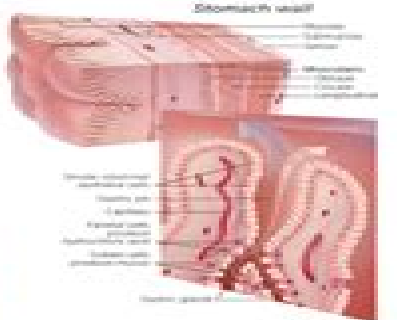

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing the food breaks it into smaller pieces, making it easier to swallow. Saliva, secreted by the salivary glands, moistens the food and helps in the digestion of carbohydrates. Saliva also contains enzymes that break down food into smaller pieces, making it easier to swallow. Saliva also contains enzymes that break down food into smaller pieces, making it easier to swallow.

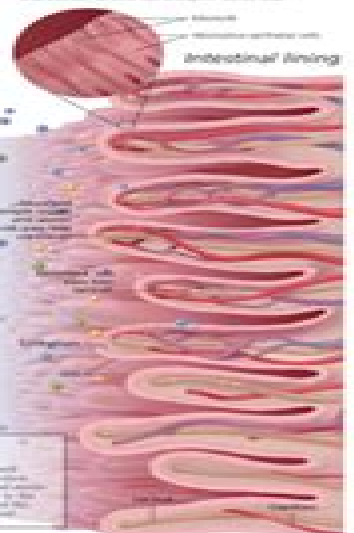

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for the digestion of food. It is located in the upper abdomen and is connected to the esophagus and the small intestine. The stomach wall is composed of several layers of muscle and is lined with a mucous membrane.

Small intestine

The small intestine is a long, coiled tube that is responsible for the digestion of food. It is located in the lower abdomen and is connected to the stomach and the large intestine. The small intestine is divided into three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum.

Absorption

The nutrients from the food are absorbed into the blood and lymphatic system. The nutrients are then transported to the cells of the body, where they are used for energy and growth. The nutrients are absorbed through the villi of the small intestine.
